Red Sox Rooters

they're taking root everywhere

Henry Berry

On a summer day in '79, I delivered a speech on baseball humor to a gathering of Red Sox fans in Oakland, CA. Tony Conigliaro was also a speaker on the program. In the evening a group of us went to the Oakland Coliseum to see Boston play the A's. Although the attendance was sparse, I noted an abundance of Red Sox caps in the stands. This reinforced my belief that Red Sox fans are not limited to the New England area. Native New Englanders, who relocate to other parts, tend to take their allegiance to the Sox with them. It takes a certain understanding to be a Red Sox fan—a loyalty that dies hard.

Actually, I had known this since the mid-1950s when I moved to Gates Mills, OH, a suburb of Cleveland. Having been brought up in Hartford, CT, under the spell of radio announcer Fred Hoey ("Come on Doc [Cramer], yuh gotta run, Doc."), I was naturally a Red Sox fan. Each time Boston came to Cleveland I would be there to cheer them on. I would go to the game early to watch batting practice. It was worth the price of admission to see the members of both teams stop what they were doing and watch "Teddy Ballgame" (Williams) take his cuts.

At one of these displays of Williams' batting prowess, I found myself talking to a man named Alden Mills. Mills, originally from Concord, MA, was a Red Sox fan. He had a companion at the game named Barry McLaughlin, another New Englander and staunch Red Sox supporter. The three of us soon started going to Cleveland's Municipal Stadium for each Red Sox–Indians game. It was great, a tiny enclave of Red Sox fans in that massive ballpark.

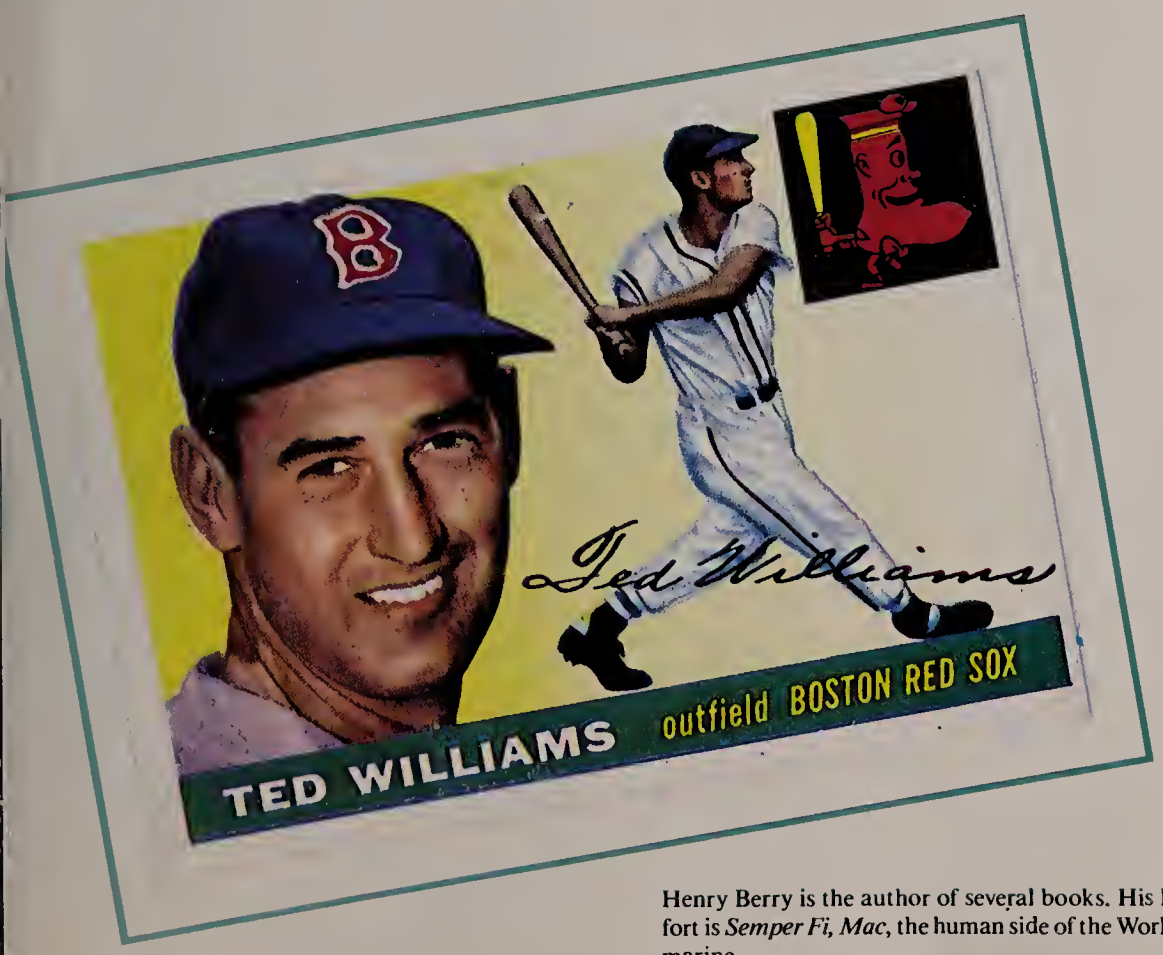

Word of our Red Sox entourage started to spread and our following began to grow—first fellow New Englanders, then Red Sox fans all over the country. Some had fallen in love with Fenway while attending school near Boston; others had contracted Red Sox fever while vacationing on Cape Cod. Whatever influenced them was of little importance. They all rooted for the Sox, and that's what mattered.

Our group would show up in force for Boston's spring trip to Cleveland each year—our hopes always high. Would this be the year Tom Brewer, Willard Nixon, and Frank Sullivan would pitch us to a pennant? Was there a better outfield than (Ted) Williams, (Jimmy) Piersall, and (Jackie) Jensen? By the time the Sox made their final western swing, all illusions of a pennant were gone for the year. We still had Ted, though, and how he loved that Cleveland ballpark!

The high point of my days in Cleveland was Ted's 500th home run in June, 1960. In Williams' terms it wasn't much of a shot—an opposite field clout that went over the left-field fence with little to spare—yet we celebrated into the wee hours of the morning at the Theatrical Grill on Short Vincent Street.

At this point I was doing business in Detroit. Once again I ran into several transplanted New Englanders working in the Motor City. (It seemed that wherever I worked or lived, I always met up with other Red Sox fans.) About ten of us were at the game when Ted Williams made his last trip to Briggs (Tiger) Stadium. Number 9 didn't let us down. He hit a monstrous shot off left-handed pitcher Don Mossi.

Ted retired at the end of the 1960 season just as I moved to Darien, CT. Darien was basically Yankee territory (unlike my boyhood home of Hartford which was Red Sox country). Life was hard for Red Sox fans in southern Fairfield County during the early '60s. The Yankees ruled the roost and their fans made sure everyone knew it.

Henry Berry is the author of several books. His latest effort is Semper Fi, Mac, the human side of the World War II marine.

Then an amazing thing happened. I was taking a late train home from New York after watching the Yankees once again destroy the Sox. The only pleasant part of the game was a superb relief job by the "Monster," (Dick Radatz). I was deep in my thoughts of despair, when all of a sudden I heard four or five singing voices coming from the back of the car proudly proclaiming:

"Who's better than his brother Joe? Dominic Di-Magg-i-o!"

These singers were being led by a jovial fellow named Jim Powers. He seemed to resemble the immortal " 'Nuf Ced" McGreevey, a leader of the Royal Rooters of the early 1900s. Originally from Uxbridge, MA, Jimmy is the founder and president of the BLOHARDS (Benevolent Loyal Order Honorable Ancient Red Sox Diehard Sufferers).

When the singing had subsided, I quickly introduced myself by offering a toast to the great Jimmie Foxx. You see, by mentioning "Ole Double X" one can promptly indentify oneself as a real Red Sox fan.

The conversation soon turned to the age-old Red Sox—Yankee rivalry.

"Do you remember those last two games of the '49 season?" asked Powers. "Oh, they were horrible! Why in heaven's name did [Joe] McCarthy pinch hit for [Ellis] Kinder in that last game? Ellie may have loved his bourbon but he was sure pitching a great game."

"He surely was," I replied. "And remember, we had beaten the Yankees three straight the previous week."

Then I pointed out how Boston had won the first crucial clash with the Yankees (Highlanders) in 1904 when Jack Chesbro had uncorked an ill-timed wild pitch which gave the Red Sox the pennant. I had indeed found a home.

It turned out the BLOHARDS consisted of about thirty or so loosely knit members. While most of our group had been brought up in New England, some were New Yorkers drawn to the Sox by a pronounced dislike of the Yankees. Our big moment, in the mid-'60s, would occur when Boston visited New York. We would hold a luncheon and the Red Sox would always furnish speakers such as Billy Herman, Johnny Pesky, and Ken Coleman. We were a happy band of brothers, each one trying to outdo the other in his adulation of the Sox.

Then came the explosion. On the Yankee opening day in '67, we were at the Stadium to see Boston rookie Billy Rohr throw a one-hitter. By the end of the season, Elston Howard, who made that one hit, would be in a Boston uniform helping the Red Sox win their first pennant in twenty-one years.

The BLOHARDS embarking on annual Opening Day trip to Fenway.

The BLOHARDS saw some tremendous games at the Stadium and at Fenway. After one of these games, a great victory aided by a Joe Foy grand slam, we decided to take three taxi cabs back to Fairfield County. We had no treasury left the next day, but it was worth it.

During the last week of the season, several of us drove to Fenway only to see Cleveland crush our heroes. A bit of the sting, however, was taken off as we listened to the radio during the long drive home. Last place Kansas City took two from Chicago and all was not lost. The year of the Yaz was a glorious year indeed!

The year 1967 was also a BLOHARDS watershed, a turning point. We would never again be a small band of brothers in enemy territory. New members joined us from New Jersey, Long Island, New Haven—we even had one from Philadelphia. It is rumored that some are even Yankee fans in disguise. Perish the thought! Our membership is now well over two hundred; close to 25 percent are women. We even have a treasurer, Walter Teitz, who is probably the club's hardest worker.

In 1968 I began to charter a bus for opening day at Fenway. Arthur Moscato, Red Sox ticket director, has a standing order for 44 tickets. The trip has become so popular that one must have his reservation in by January 1. I furnish five cases of beer, one of which is always Narragansett (one-time Red Sox sponsor). And I always have two pouches of Kentucky Club pipe tobacco in memory of Fred Hoey. Traditions such as these hold Red Sox fans together no matter where they live.

We have lived through the dreary days of the early '60s, "Little Looie" (Aparicio, who was elected to the Hall of Fame this past January) falling down while rounding third in Detroit to end the 1972 season, and the Labor Day visit to Baltimore in '74 when the Sox were shut out in three games.

However, there are also the bright moments such as the sweep of a double-header over the Yankees in July, 1975, at Shea Stadium. (This infuriated George Steinbrenner to such an extent he fired his manager.) We don't think of the Sox blowing a huge lead in '78. We think of them winning the last eight games straight to force the Yankees into a playoff. To blazes with Bucky Dent!

Well, our membership seems to get younger and younger. Very few are left who still remember Black Jack Wilson and Fritz Ostermueller from the 1930s. Nevertheless, we prosper mightily. There is very serious talk of starting a BLOHARDS chapter in Chicago. There are plenty of Red Sox fans there—they are everywhere. Most of them may not recall Mary Hennessey and her, "Hi, neighbor, have a 'Gansett" but they root for the Red Sox, and that's what counts.

The BLOHARDS, established in 1964, meet twice a year, on each Red Sox visit to Yankee Stadium. Their meetings reflect the precept that baseball is fun, and a slide presentation on Red Sox humor is a customary feature. About 350 people attend the meetings, out of which 200 are dues-paying members.

Manager and Coaches

Ralph Houk Manager 35

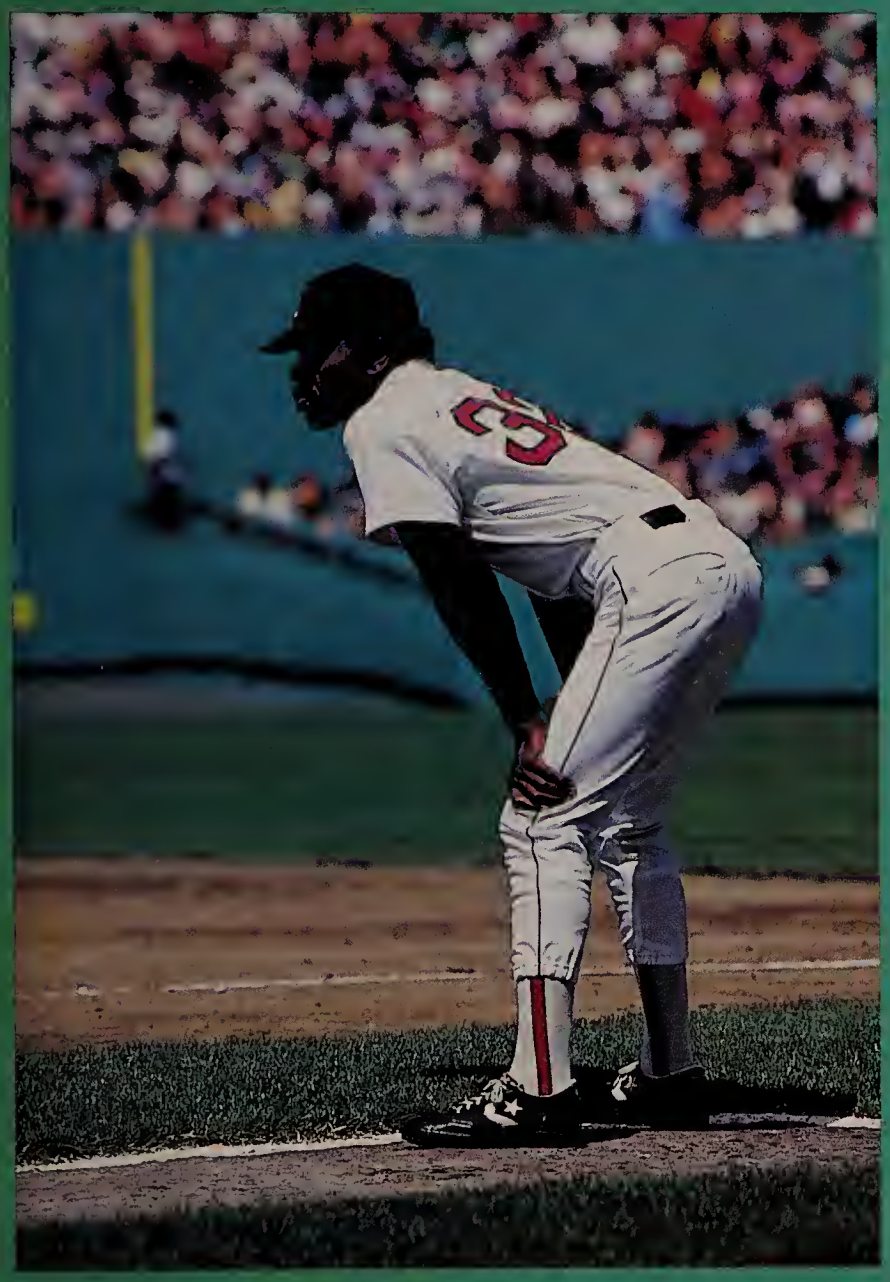

Ralph is a believer in a positive attitude. "The difference between winning and losing isn't that great," he states. "Naturally there are always 'ifs,' but I believe we're headed in the right direction." Houk became the Red Sox' 35th manager on October 27, 1980, ending a two-year retirement. He previously managed 16 years in the A.L. with the Yankees and Tigers. From 1961 to 1963, the Yankees won three straight pennants and two World Championships under his direction. Ralph is a master at handling a pitching staff and believes the young Red Sox mound corps can carry the team into contention in 1984. Houk began the 1984 season 12 games away from 3,000 as a major league manager, and his 1,533 wins ranked 11th on the all-time list. In 1961 Ralph was named Major League Manager of the Year and in 1970, American League Manager of the Year. During the winter, Ralph and his wife, Bette, reside in Pompano Beach, FL, where they enjoy golf and fishing.

Johnny Pesky Dugout Coach 6

"On hitting — first of all get a bat you know you can handle. A pepper game is a good exercise. Constant practice is the best way of learning how to hit. Infielders should use a glove that they feel comfortable with. Field the ball out in front of you and take a lot of ground balls every day. Try to control the ball when you throw it."

Tommy Harper First Base Coach 32
"A first base coach has to make sure the batter becomes a runner mentally when he gets on first. He must keep the runner alert for possible signs from the third base coach and also watch the defensive alignment of the opposition. Speed and getting a good jump are the most important parts of stealing a base."

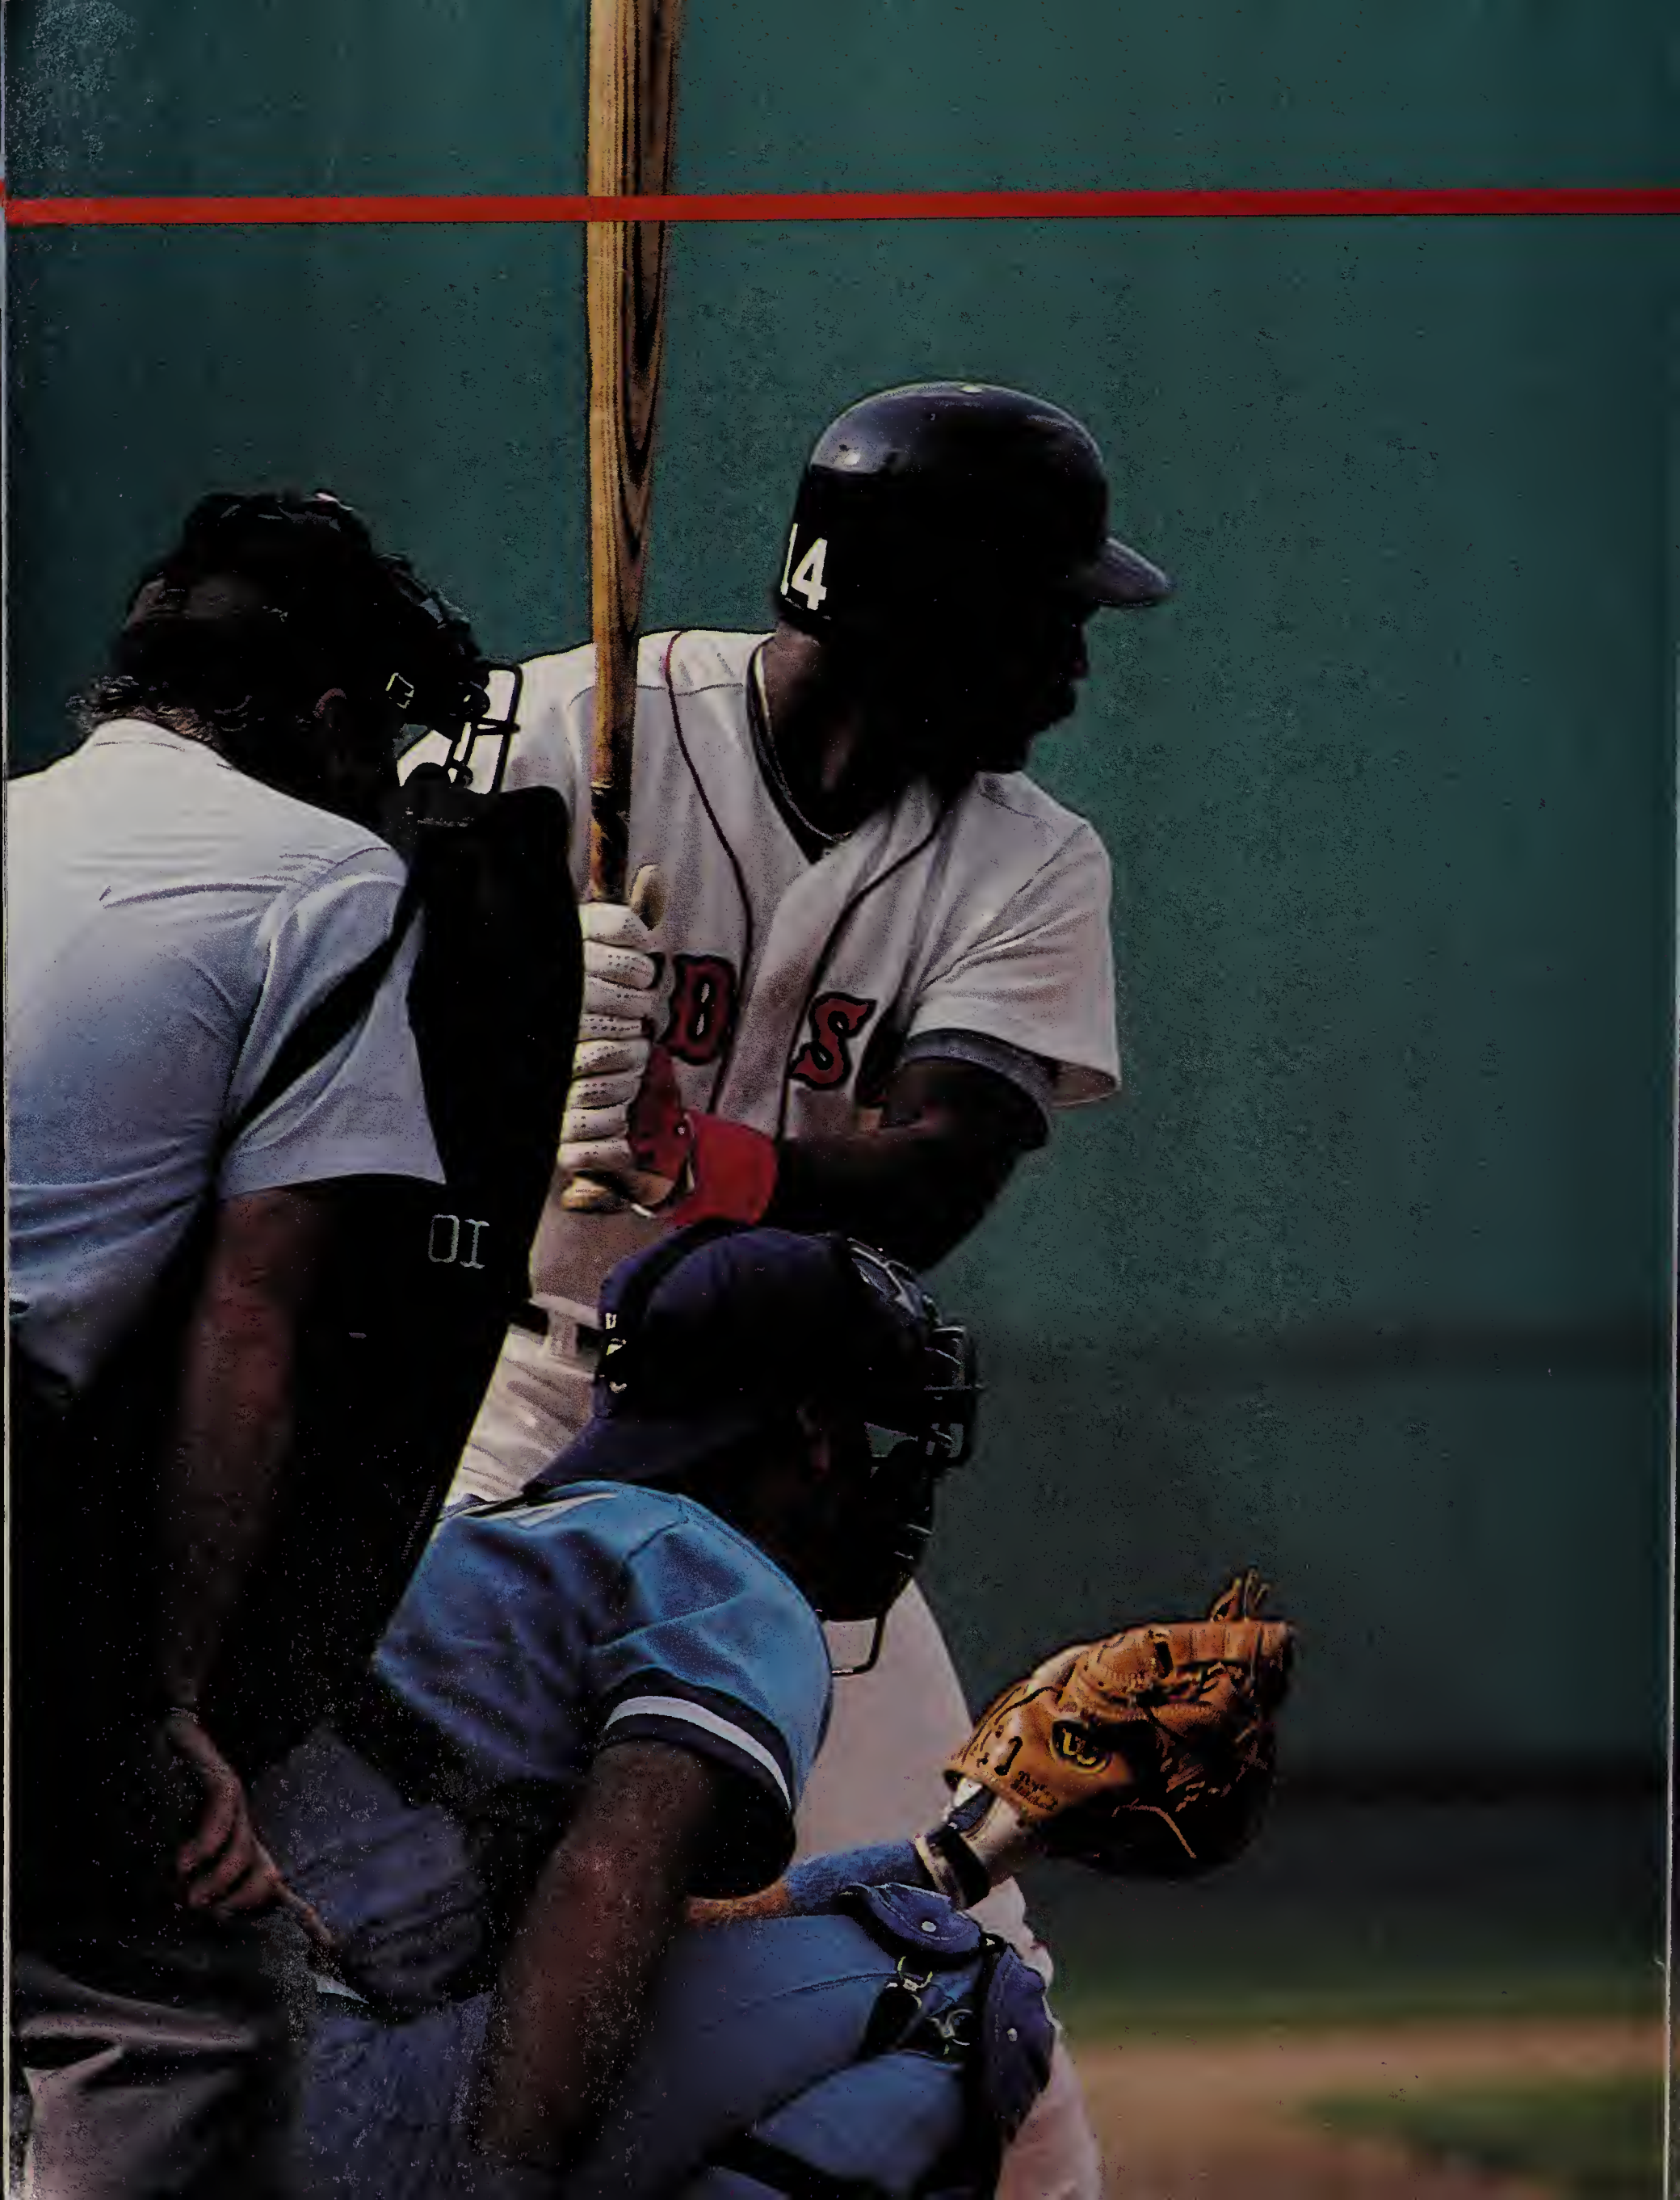

Walt Hriniak Bullpen Coach 33
"Hitters aren't born good hitters. Good hitters are made. Every hitter can get better if he thinks right and works hard enough. Practice, practice, practice. Develop good habits in batting practice. Realize your capabilities so you can get the most out of yourself."

Lee Stange Pitching Coach 34
"My philosophy on pitching is to stay ahead of the hitters by throwing strikes. Other than that, I think all pitchers are individuals and have to be helped in an individual way because everyone throws differently and has different problems. It's up to me to find a solution for each one."

Eddie Yost Third Base Coach 36
"Using good judgment is important for a third base coach. You have to know the opposition and their capabilities as fielders. Also you must know the running ability of your own players. You have to know the condition of the field you are playing on. A third base coach also relays signs to the batter and any runners. It's important that you use both hands simultaneously when giving the signs."

Jim Rice

Leading by Example

Joe Giuliotti

It was the final day of the 1983 season and the opposition was the last place Cleveland Indians. The sixth place Red Sox had also been eliminated from the East Division race, yet there wasn't a seat available in Fenway Park. Fans had come not to see a ballgame but to witness an event in Red Sox history that would never be forgotten.

It was the final bow for a legend. Carl Yastrzemski, after 23 years, was saying goodbye to baseball. Another very significant event, however, was to take place that early October afternoon.

The end of an era was coming to a close and so was a dismal season when Jim Rice started towards the batter's box for his final swings of '83. Almost as though it had been planned, the sellout crowd suddenly rose and began a long ovation that had been the custom every time Yastrzemski had made a move that last weekend. This time, however, it was not for the outgoing Red Sox captain. It was for the man the people had chosen as his successor — Jim Rice.

They had cheered every move of the man who led the Red Sox for many years, and now they were hailing the one they had picked to carry on. The fans were letting Rice know they had voted him into the position as leader of the Red Sox.

"I didn't know what was going on," Rice would later explain. "I thought it was another ovation for Yaz, but when I turned around he was walking out of the dugout leading the cheers."

Later that evening at a reception in honor of Yastrzemski, Rice asked a friend how he interpreted the fan reaction.

"It was their way of telling you they had just elected you their new captain," the friend responded.

At first Rice said he wanted no part of it. "I can't go around telling grown men what to do in a clubhouse. That's the job of the skipper."

He didn't quite understand. He wasn't being forced to take the job as commander of the troops. He was just being handed the torch to carry on as field leader as Yaz had always been.

Rice has always done more than his share between the lines. His figures speak for themselves. He had been a much better performer than Yastrzemski in the nine years they played together, but Number 8 was the leader and Rice had to wait in the shadows until his time came to succeed. That time came last October 2.

"I don't like the idea of being captain but if the fans want me, I'll respect them and do it," he said. "I've always tried to do my best representing the team on and off the field and will continue to do so. At first I didn't understand the message they were giving me. Now I do."

To understand Rice's thinking you have to know the man. In many ways, he and Yastrzemski are alike. Both always put out the proverbial 110 percent. Both have played hurt, and never relinquished the burning desire to win. The slight difference in the pair was Rice was able to hide his emotions much better than Yastrzemski. When the Red Sox lost the 1978 playoff game to the New York Yankees, Yastrzemski broke down and cried. Rice wanted to but wouldn't allow it to happen in the presence of his teammates and the media.

When the team wasn't playing well, Yastrzemski could, without naming names, get a message across. Rice wouldn't say anything publically, but privately his feelings were just as strong.

He shows the same business-like emotions whether he hits a home run, knocks in a key run, or strikes out with the bases loaded. It's not that he isn't excited or mad, that's just his style.

He's not the type to raise his voice in the clubhouse when things aren't going well. Since he came to the major leagues in late August, 1974, Rice has been a private person. He's been described as a loner by some but that adjective doesn't quite fit him.

As a young teenager who could hit a ball over 400 feet, he once quit a team because he felt an error he made had lost the game.

He is one of the strongest men in baseball, yet hates any thought of violence. He's been thrown at many, many times but only twice has he shown anger toward the pitcher.

He never argues with an umpire. "What good does it do? He's not going to change his decision," is his philosophy.

The late umpire, Nestor Chylak, told a story about Rice in his rookie year. There was a dispute over whether a ball had carried to the right of the yellow line in center field which would have been a home run. Chylak ruled it had and Fred Lynn, playing center field, was all over the arbiter. Rice charged over from left but before he could say anything Chylak said, "What are you doing here? This is none of your business." Rice stopped, said, "You're right," and went back to his position.

Rice has, until recent years, not been the type to want public attention. He was labeled as uncooperative by some members of the media. He was a tough man to interview not because he wanted to make things difficult for them but because he felt uncomfortable. On many occasions after a big offensive day, Rice would seek the sanctuary of the training room to avoid the interviews and the limelight. But if he had made a bad play that had a bearing on the game, he would sit in front of his locker ready to discuss it. And he never had an alibi.

Age and experience have changed Rice. Last season, after being thrown at by Yankee pitcher Matt Keough in New York, he hit a pair of mammoth home runs off him. After the game, he sat in the middle of the clubhouse and answered question after question — no matter how silly or frivolous — until there were no more to be asked.

The public saw the real Jim Rice in action two years ago when a young boy, sitting in the box seats adjacent to the Red Sox dugout, was struck on the head with a foul ball. Rice leaped from the dugout, picked up the bleeding child in his arms, and rushed him to the first aid room.

He has made many visits to youngsters in hospitals. Like Ted Williams, he has always done it quietly, not even wanting to discuss it with his close friends in the Boston media.

His private life is just that — private.

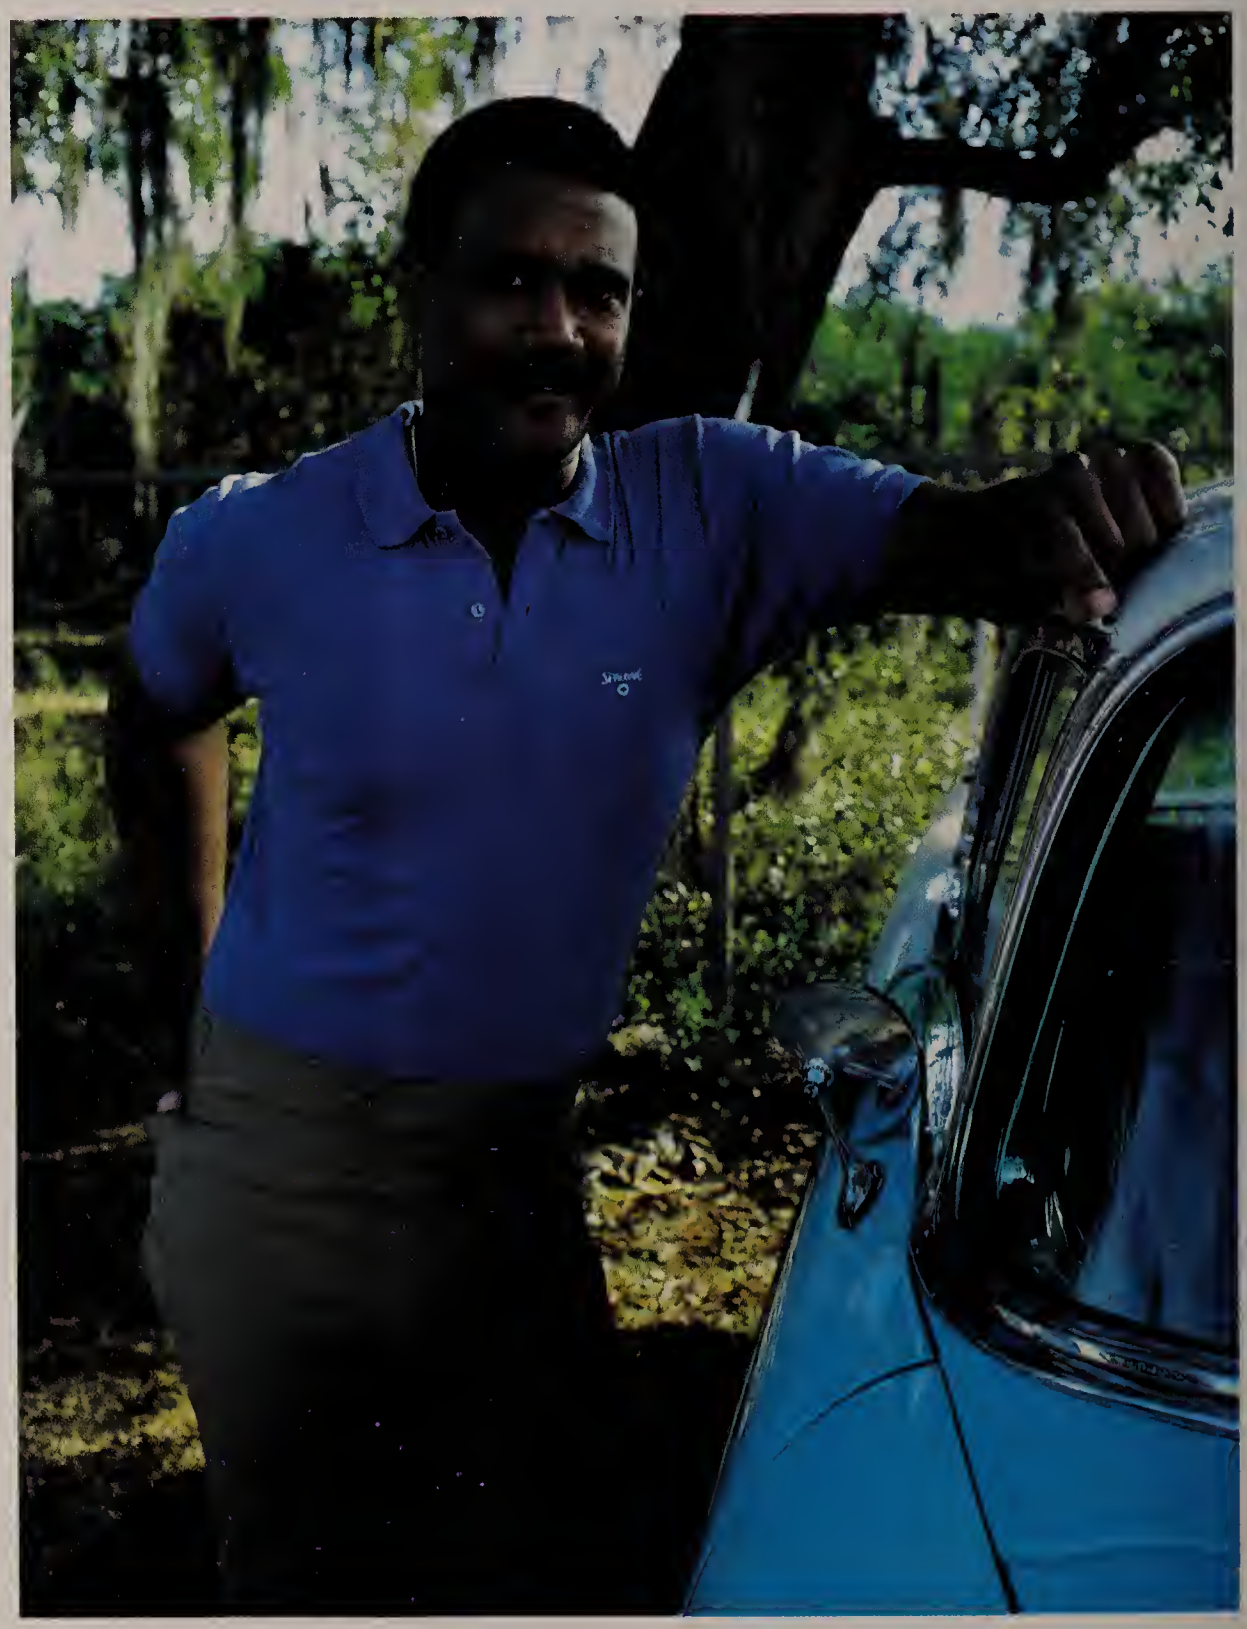

"When the season is over, I just like to spend time with my wife [Corine] and children [Chauncy, 5, and Carissa, 3]."

Rice is an avid golfer (watching him drive a golf ball is even more awesome than watching him hit a baseball) and already has Chauncy playing.

He and his wife enjoy bowling but don't go as often as they used to. "When Coop [Cecil Cooper] was with the team, my wife and I and he and his wife were always bowling. But I haven't done much since he left."

Rice and his wife sometimes enjoy a little one-on-one basketball together. "She played in high school but never liked to go against me because I was too good for her," he jokes.

He has always been content to go to the park, do his job ("I've always done it to the best of my ability and always will"), and go home. He didn't want the job as captain, but it was willed on him by the fans and he'll carry the mantle. The fans are the best and, really, the only judges, and even though he'd never admit it, being given the mandate by them was one of the biggest thrills he's had in baseball.

OUTFIELDER 14

Jim Rice

Jim put together an awesome 1983 season. He led the league in home runs and total bases, tied in RBI, and was second in slugging. He hit over .300 for the sixth time, smashed three home runs in Toronto on August 29, and hit two home runs in five other games. Defensively he was second in the A.L. with 21 assists, the first Red Sox outfielder to reach 20 assists since 1944. The Boston Writers named Jim winner of the Thomas A. Yawkey MVP award, and he was voted to the AP, UPI, and The Sporting News All Star and Silver Bat teams.

26 INFIELDER

Wade Boggs

Wade's bat scattered hits to all fields and in all parks in 1983. He amassed 210 hits plus 92 walks to lead the majors with a .361 average and a .449 on-base percentage. He became the ninth Red Sox to win the batting title with the best Sox avg. since Ted Williams hit .388 in 1957. Boggs was named to the UPI A.L. All Star team, and The Sporting News A.L. and Silver Slugger teams. The fans voted him the TV 38 Tenth Player Award winner for the second straight year. In 1976 he was a seventh-round June draft pick.

Wade Boggs

PITCHER 46

Bob Stanley

For the second straight year, Steamer was voted the club's Most Valuable Pitcher by the Boston Writers. He had a team-record 33 saves in 64 games and a 2.85 ERA in 145.1 innings. Bob held the lead or tie 45 of 60 times, and collected his 33 saves in 47 chances. He even went 10 innings in one game, second best in Red Sox history for a reliever. Stanley ended the year with five saves in his last five games. He pitched two scoreless innings in the All Star game in Chicago.

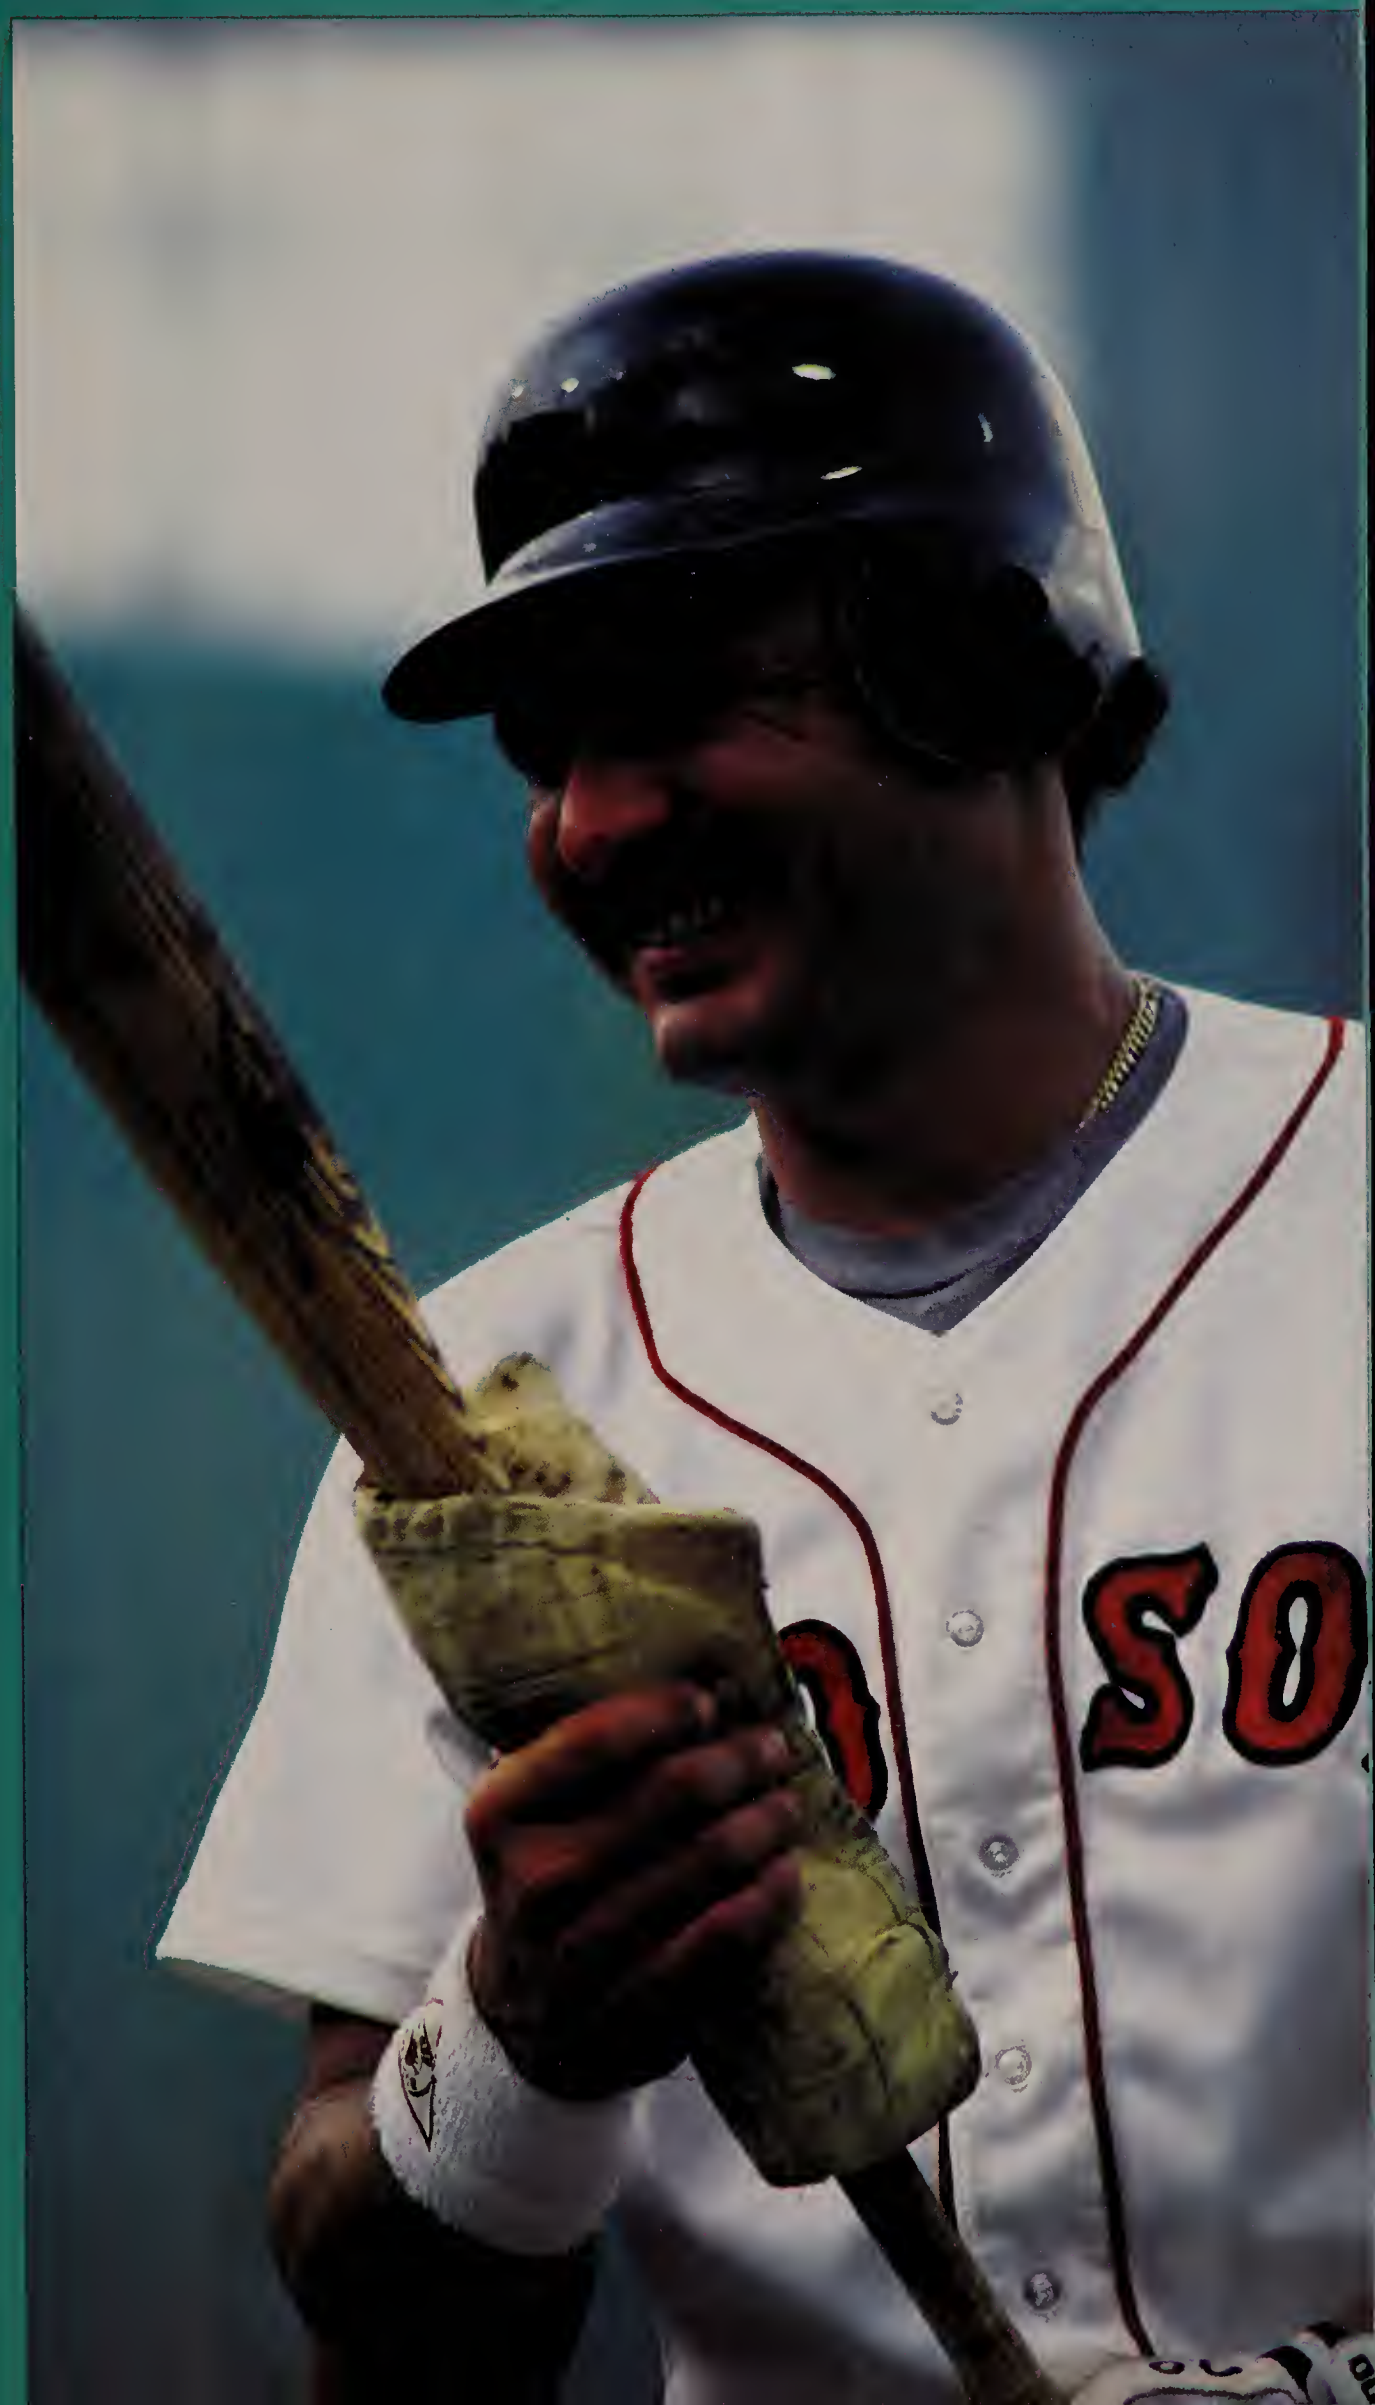

Bob Stanley

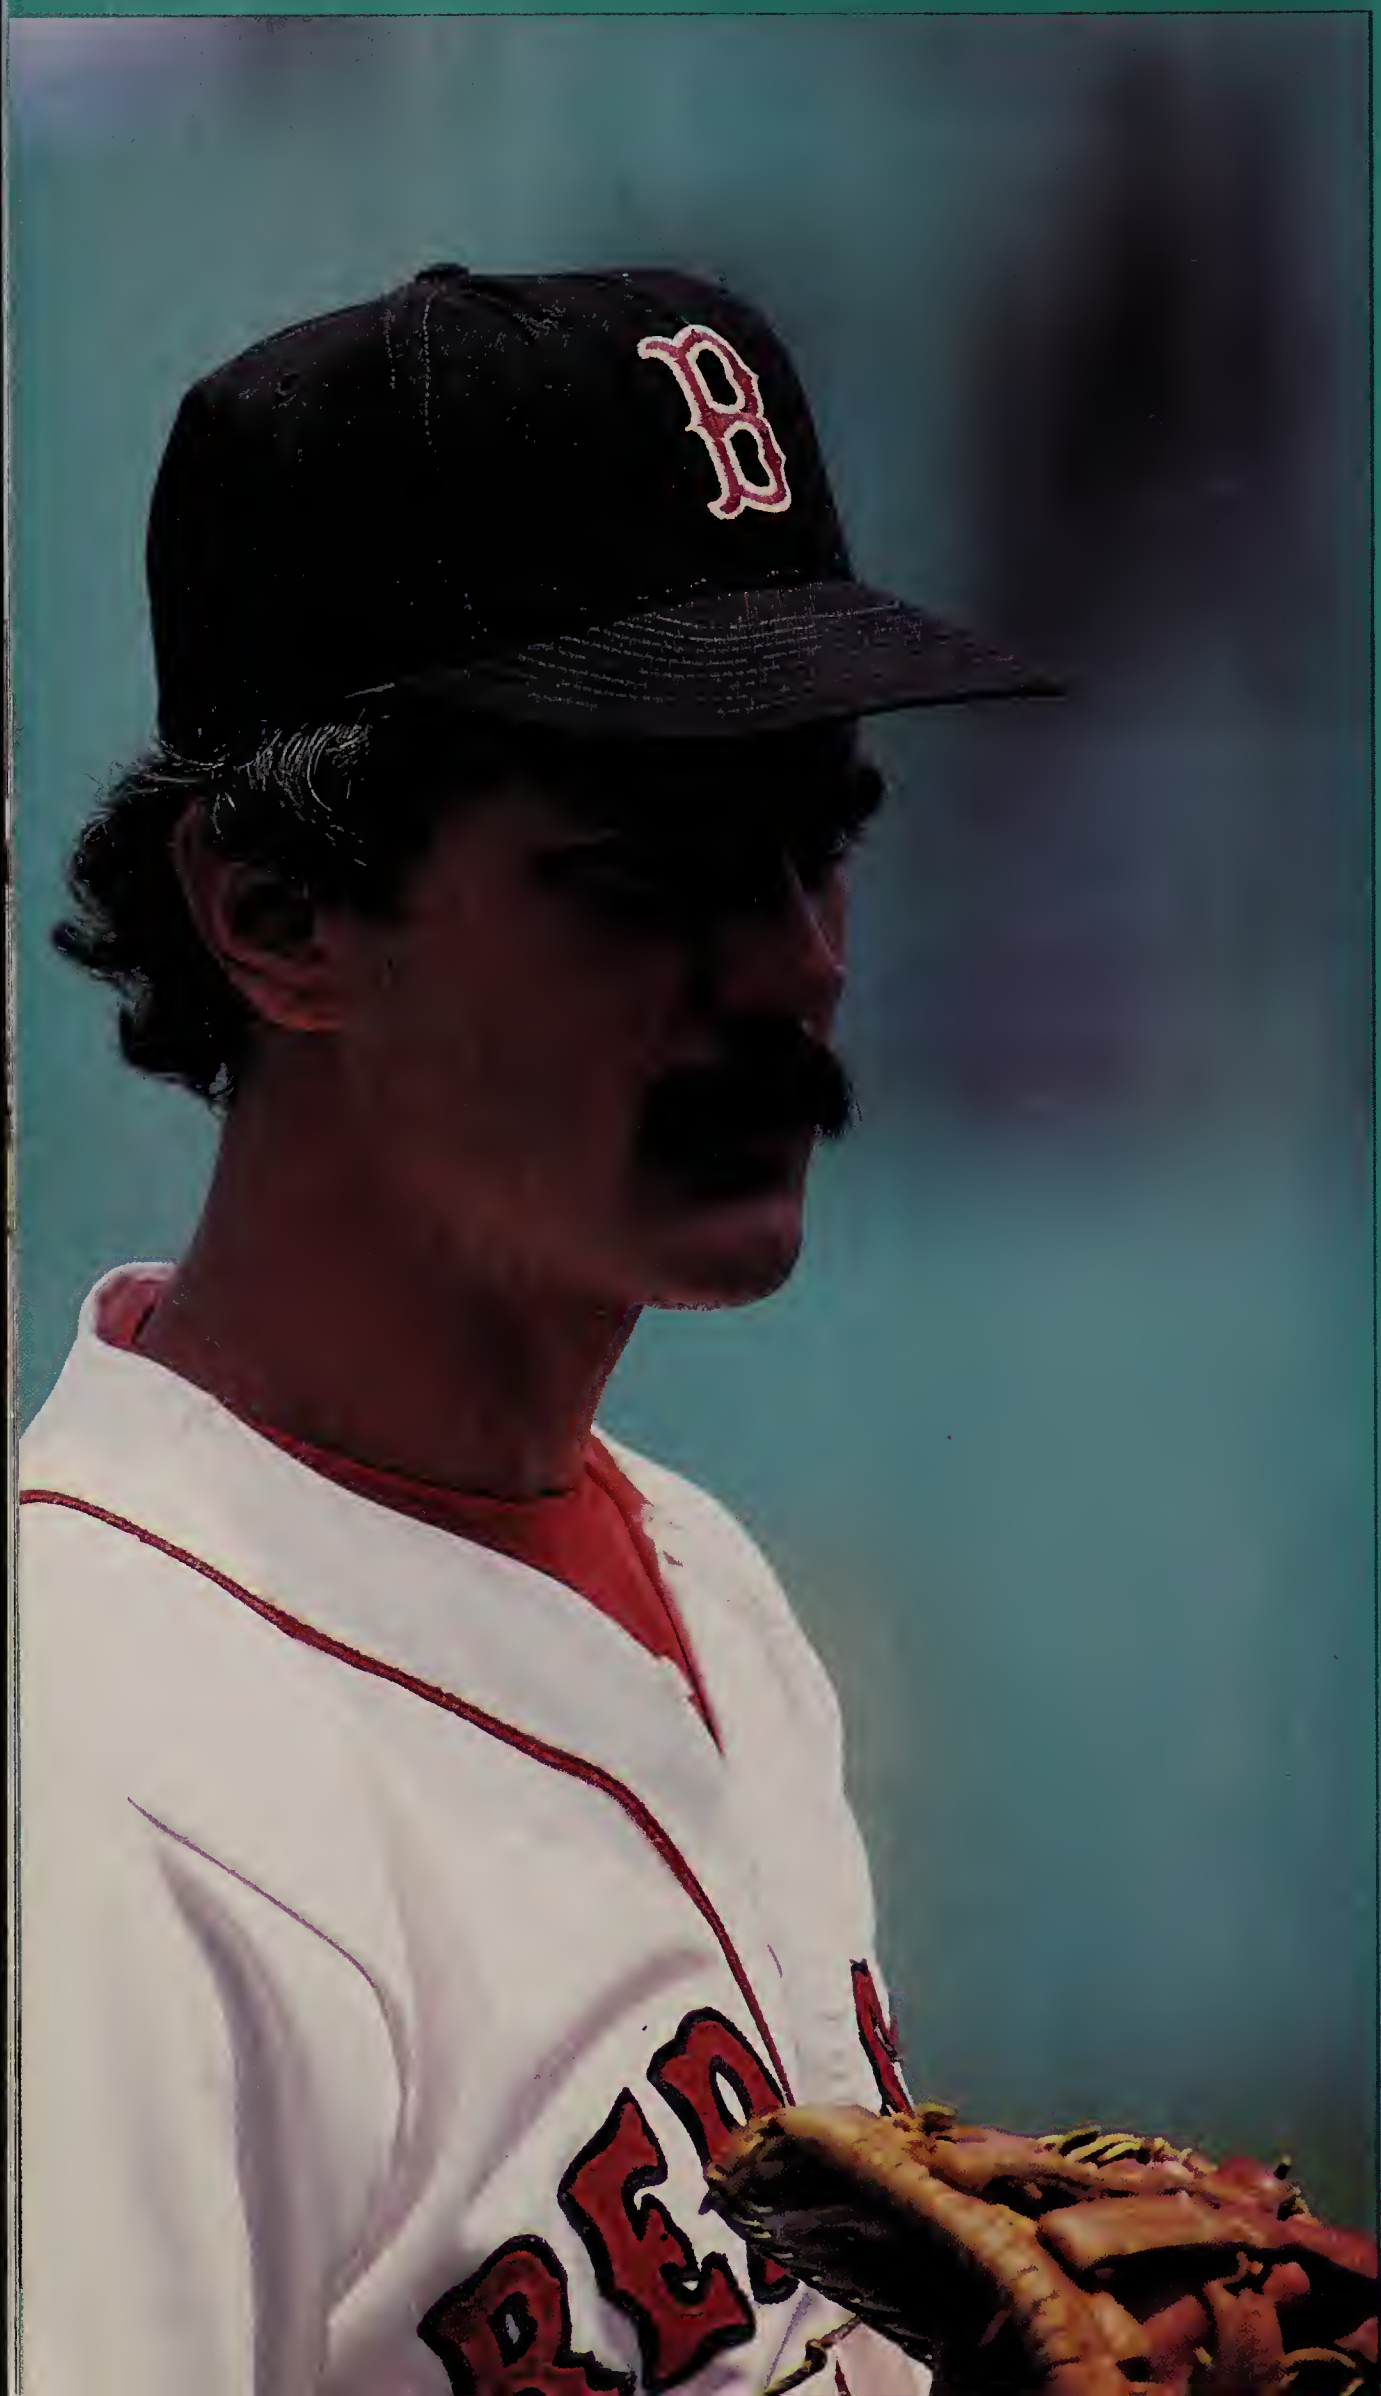

20 OUTFIELDER

Tony Armas

In 1983 Tony proved he was the power hitter the Red Sox needed in the middle of the batting order. He set a personal high with 36 home runs (second to teammate Jim Rice), tied his own high of 61 extra-base hits, and drove in 107 runs. Armas adjusted well to center field and lived up to his reputation as one of baseball's best all-out performers. Six times he hit two home runs in a game, and he led the team with 17 HR and 64 RBI in Fenway Park.

Dwight Evans

A hip ligament injury put Dwight out of action for 25 games in August and ended his consecutive-game streak at 380, seventh best all-time for the Red Sox. Despite the injury, he won his third straight Gold Glove (sixth overall), and hit 20 or more home runs for the fifth time. Evans is one of just eight players to play at least 10 years, all with the Red Sox. Last July he hit his 200th home run. In 1981-82 the Boston Writers named Dwight the winner of the Thomas A. Yawkey MVP award.

2 INFIELDER

Jerry Remy

In 1983 Jerry bounced back from a nagging back injury to hit .275 in 146 games. Defensively he tied for the least errors (seven), and ended the season with a 65-game errorless streak that covered 314 chances. He led the team with 12 sacrifice bunts, 11 stolen bases, and 17 bunt hits. Scoot does all the little things well that help a team win. Always a good contact hitter, Remy slapped the ball at a .312 pace against lefties, and hit .301 after the All Star game.

Jerry Remy

INFIELDER/DH 7

Mike Easler

The "Hit Man" became a member of the Red Sox in a trade with Pittsburgh for pitcher John Tudor on December 6, 1983. The hard-hitting lefty swinger batted .307 in 1983 despite a jammed left thumb that put him on the sidelines for almost one month. The last four years he hit .301 for the Pirates and took a .296 career average into 1984. Easler was originally signed by Houston in 1969, appeared in 21 games with the California Angels at the end of 1976, and went to the Pirates' system the following spring.

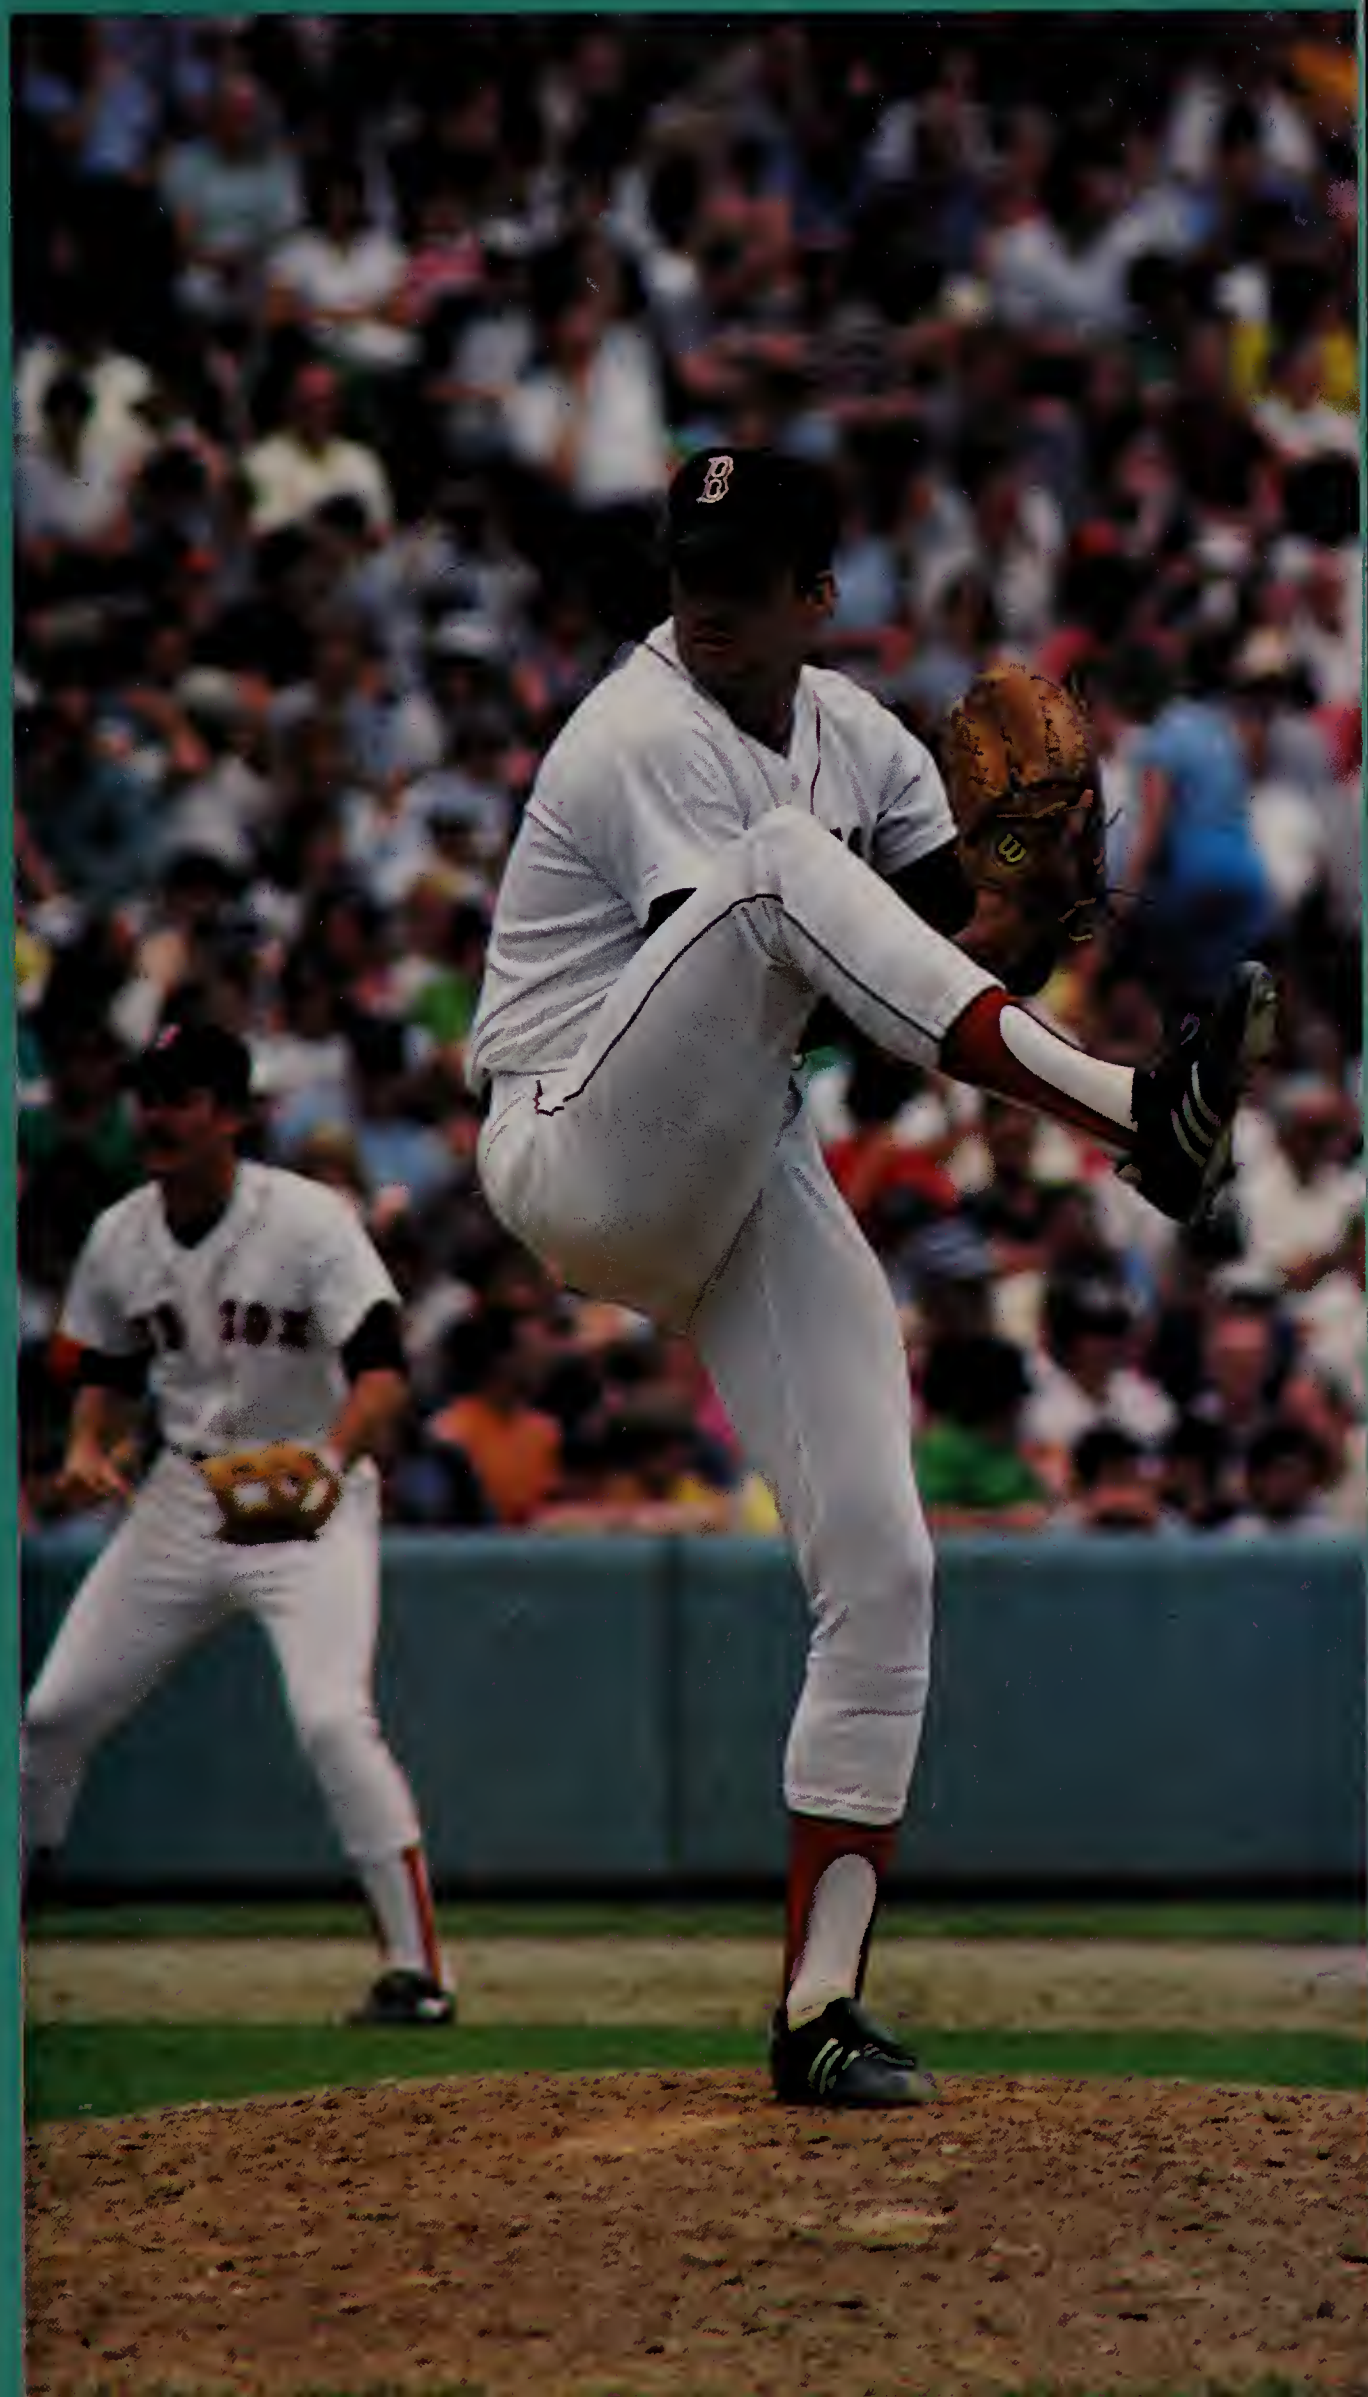

47 PITCHER

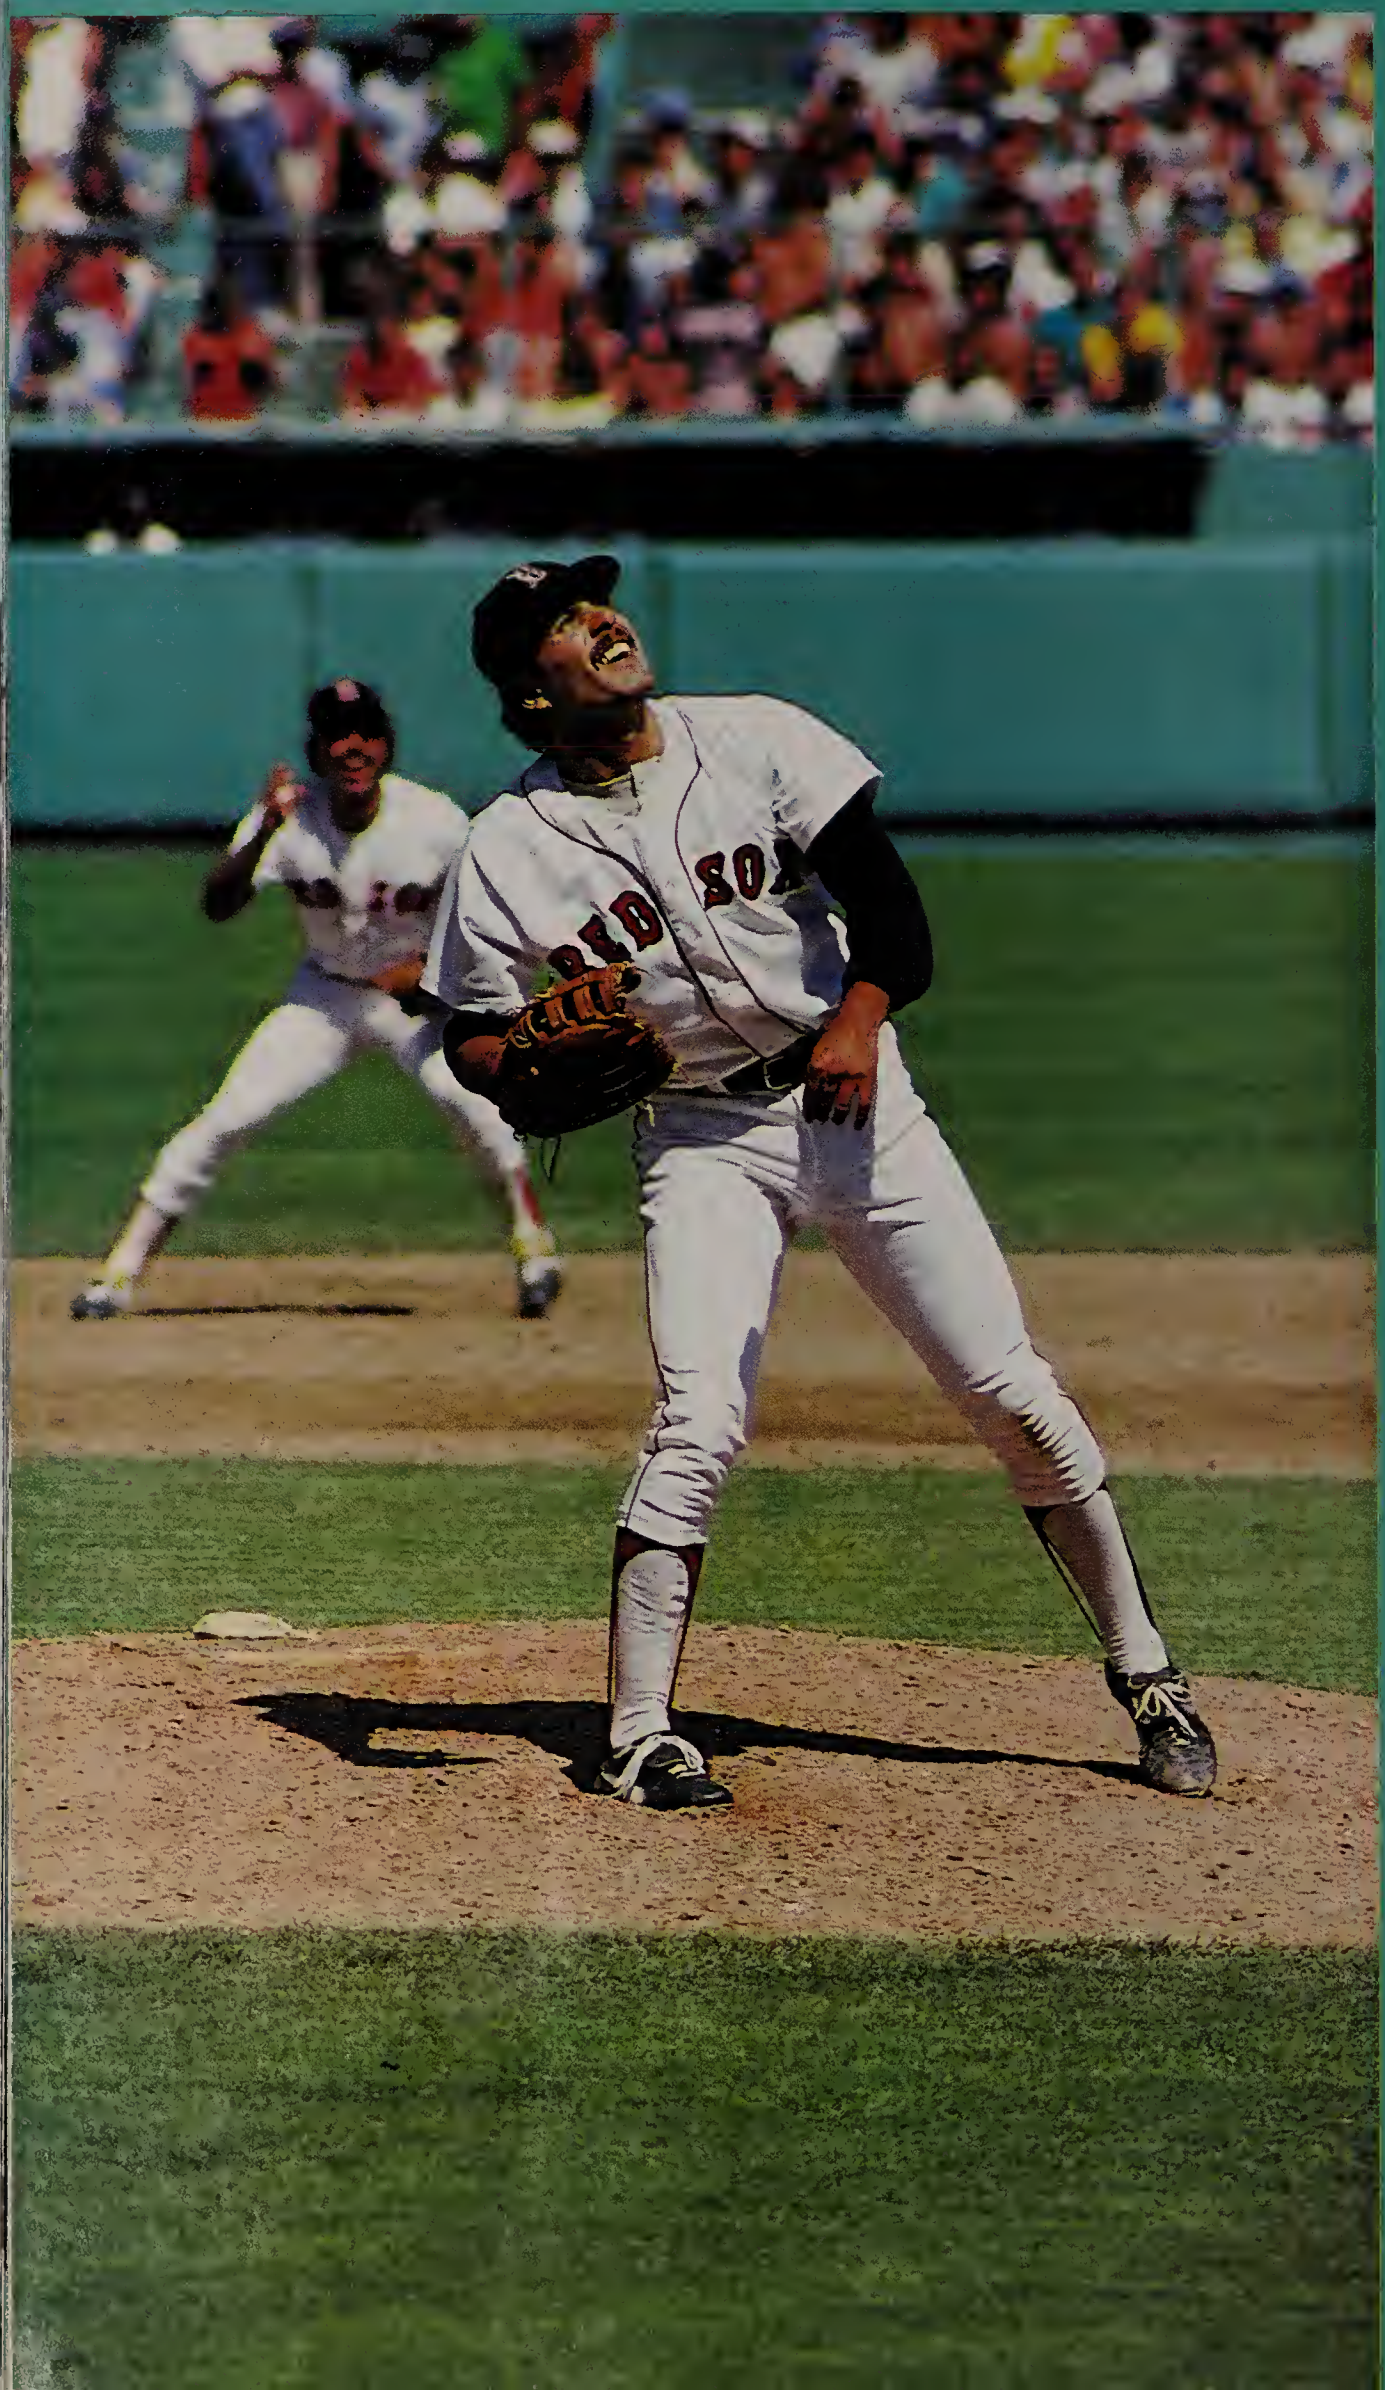

Bruce Hurst

Bruce made a rapid recovery in 1983 from surgery for an elbow chip after the 1982 season. He became one of the club's most dependable starters the last half of 1983, finished 12-12, and went more than six innings 21 times in his 32 starts. In the 1976 June draft, Hurst was the Red Sox' first selection. He started and finished 1980 in Boston and came up for good the last month of 1981. In 1981 he pitched five scoreless innings for Pawtucket in baseball's longest game.

Bruce Hurst

PITCHER 19

Bobby Ojeda

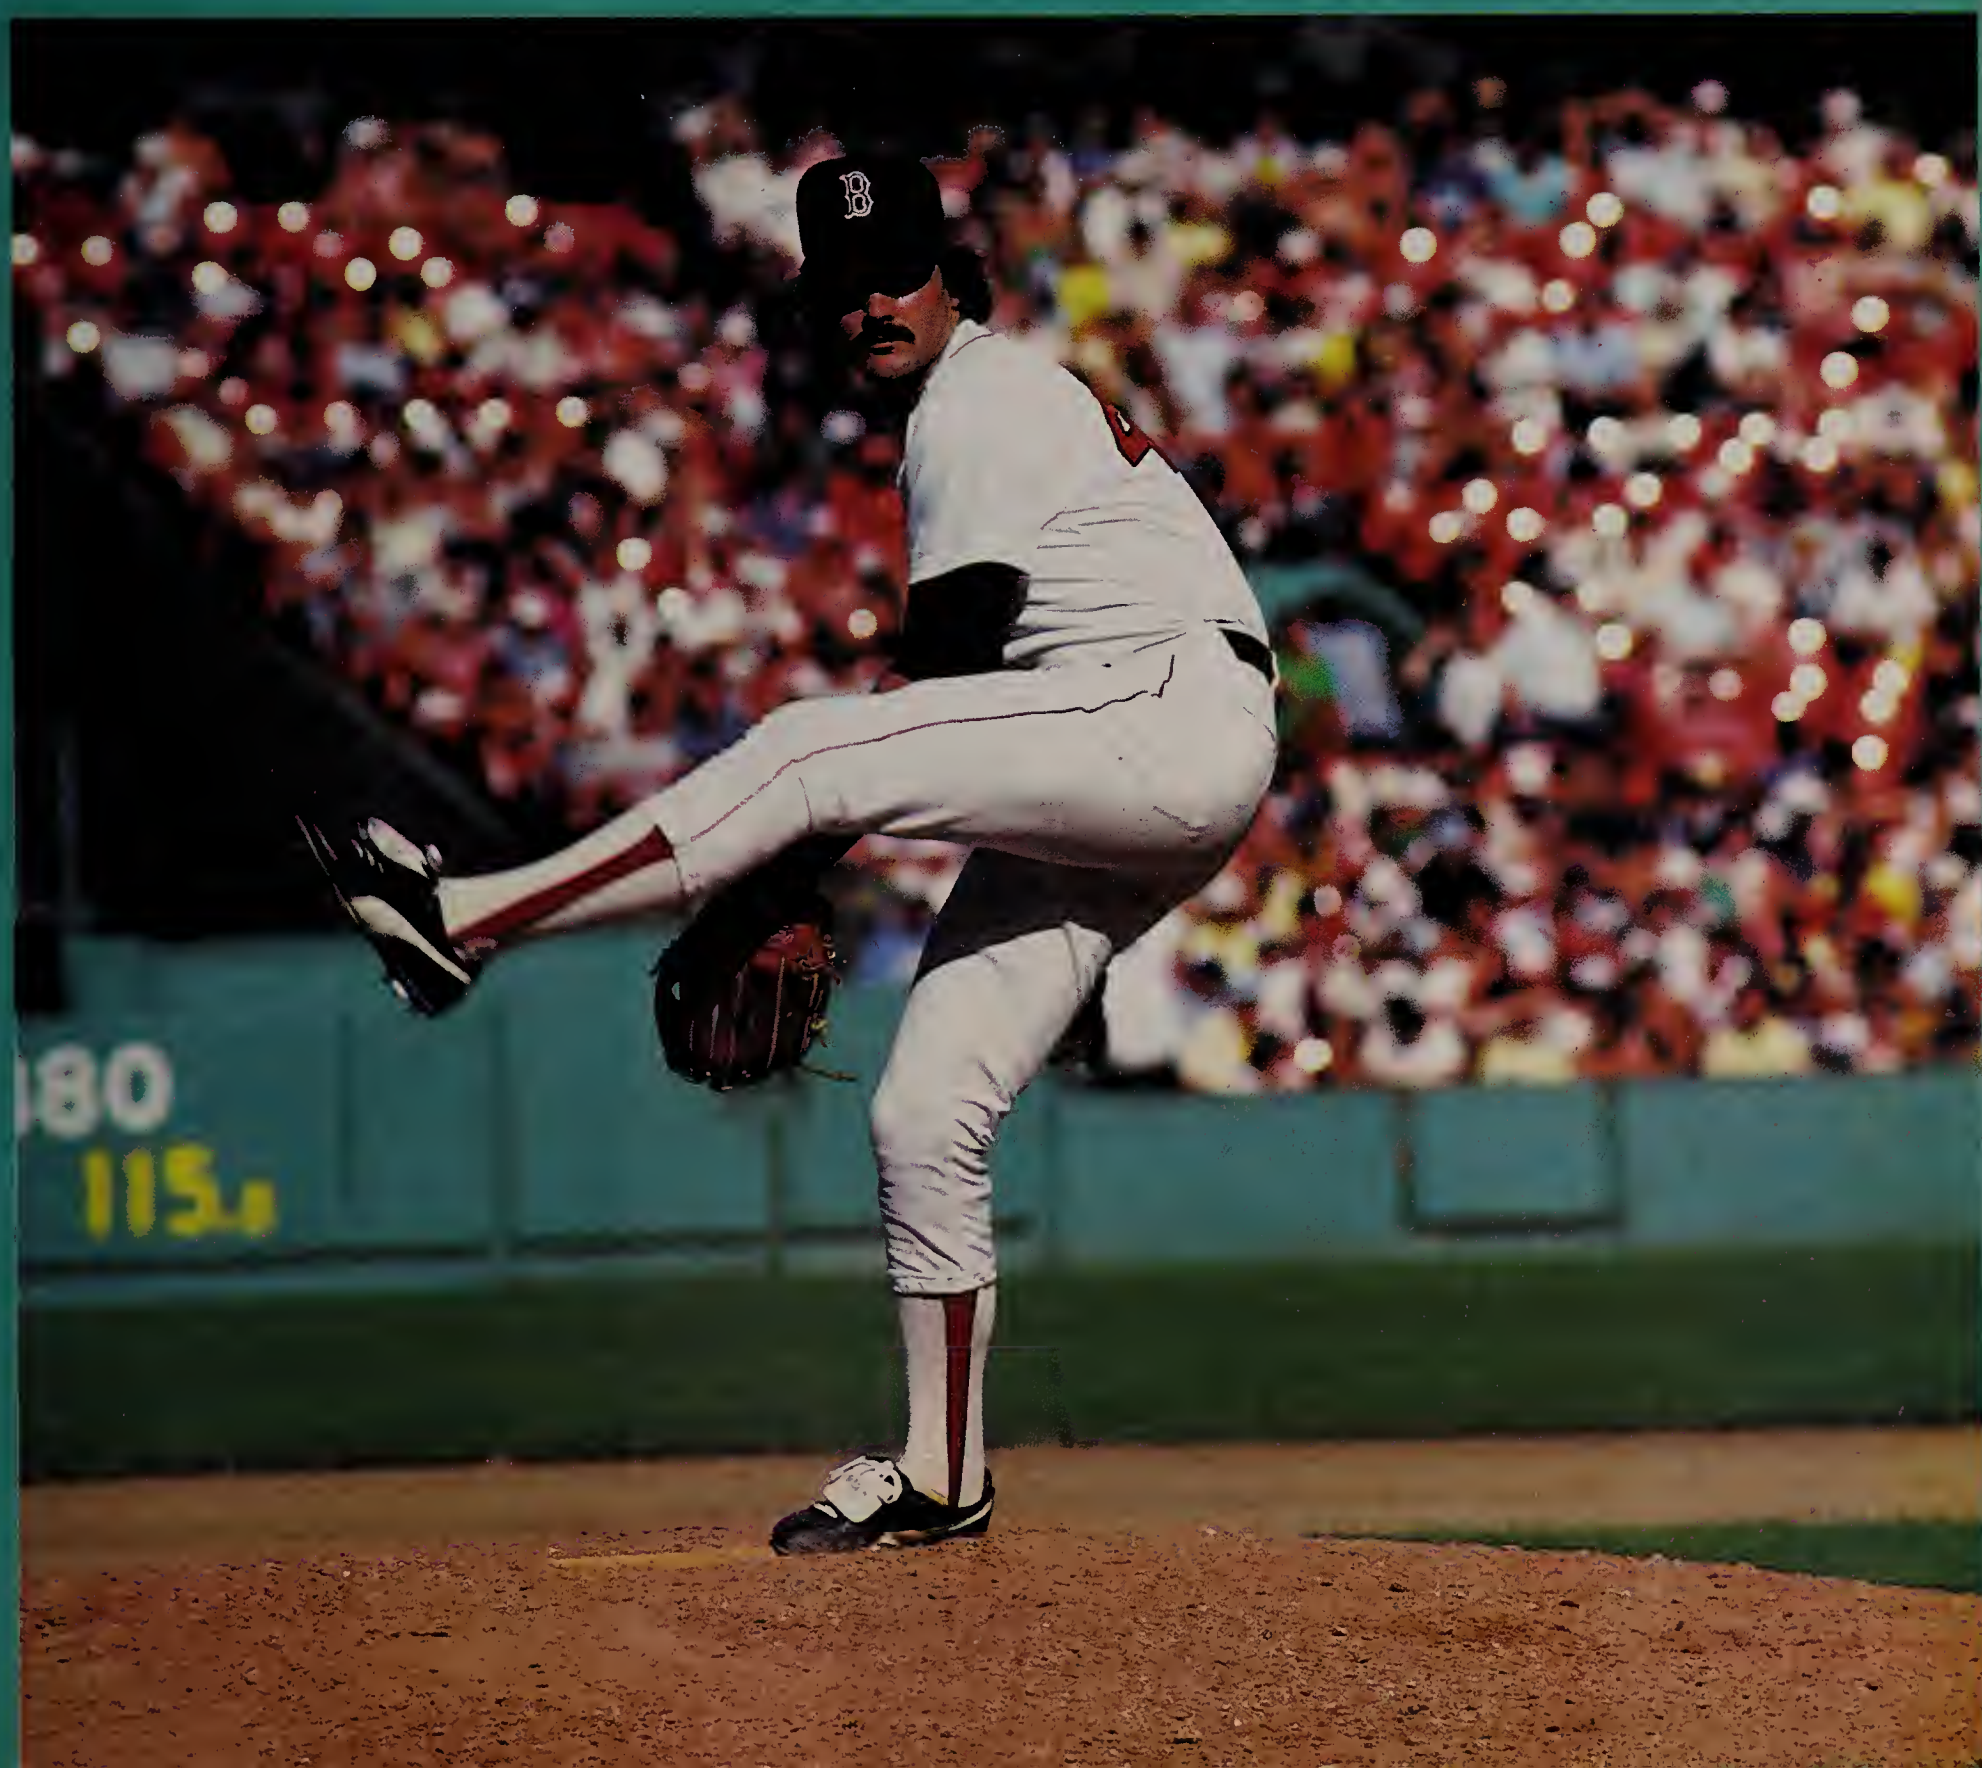

Ojeda developed into the Red Sox' best starter the last six weeks of 1983. He was 6-0 in six starts the final month, and from August 22 on he was 7-1. In his last eight starts, the most runs Bobby allowed was three, all coming in one game that he won. His final 12-7 record was more characteristic of the promise he showed in 1981 when he was named the International League's Most Valuable Pitcher. He pitched a near no-hitter in Yankee Stadium with the Red Sox in 1981, and ended the season with a 6-2 record.

43 PITCHER

Dennis Eckersley

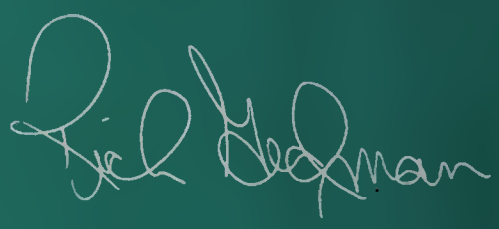

Eck's record dropped to 9-13 in 1983 but his strong competitive nature could help him rebound this season. Dennis took part in a vigorous conditioning program and started 1984 in excellent shape. In nine years he notched 120 wins (80 with the Red Sox), pitched a no-hitter and two one-hitters, won 20 games in 1978, and pitched in two All Star games. He's the veteran of the young Boston staff with 182 starts in six years.

Rich Gedman

Geddy hit a career-high .294 in 81 games in 1983 and spent the off-season catching for Caracas in the Venezuelan League. He was not drafted after graduation from St. Peter's of Worcester (MA) H.S. in 1977, but four years later was named A.L. Rookie Player of the Year by The Sporting News. He joined the Red Sox for the first time in September 1980 and caught Dennis Eckersley's one-hitter in Toronto. Last year he hit .388 on the road, best on the team.

3 OUTFIELDER

Rick Miller

For twelve years Rick has been a valuable major league performer. In 1983 he hit .286 in 104 games while playing all three outfield positions plus two games at first base. He led the A.L. last season with an impressive .457 pinch-hit average (16-35), and his 16 hits were two away from the Red Sox' all-time mark held by Hall of Famer, Joe Cronin. Twice Miller was named the team's "Unsung Hero" (1972, 1981) by the Boston Writers. Rick's teammates elected him the club's player representative in 1983.

Dave Stapleton

Dave played in a career-high 151 games, 145 at first base. He hit 10 HR and drove in 66 runs. Stape had surgery on the back of his right hand after the 1983 season, and hopes to regain the steady hitting style he has exhibited in the past. Before taking over first base permanently in 1983, Dave was the team's Mr. Versatility. He played all the infield positions plus the outfield. In 1979 Stape was International League co-MVP, and then hit .321 as a rookie in 1980.

Dave Stapleton

18 INFIELDER

Glenn Hoffman

Hoffman has been an efficient shortstop. In 1983 he raised his average 51 points and hit .260 in 143 games. Unfortunately a knee injury ended his season on September 24. He underwent surgery the next day and spent the off-season on a rehabilitative program. Glenn ranked fifth in average and walks among A.L. shortstops and tied for sixth in RBI. He had a five-hit game in Kansas City and a 4-4 game vs. the Angels. In 1980 Hoffman was named to the All Rookie team. He was the Red Sox' second pick in the 1976 June draft.

OUTFIELDER 51

Reid Nichols

Quiet and determined, Reid hit .285 in 100 games in 1983. He played all three outfield spots, was used as a designated hitter, pinch hitter and pinch runner, and even made one appearance at shortstop. Nichols can run and throw accurately. In 1982 he cracked three home runs in two nights in Seattle to win two games. Reid was the Red Sox' 12th pick in the 1976 June draft. During his minor league career, he played second, third, and shortstop as well as the outfield.

Reid Nichols

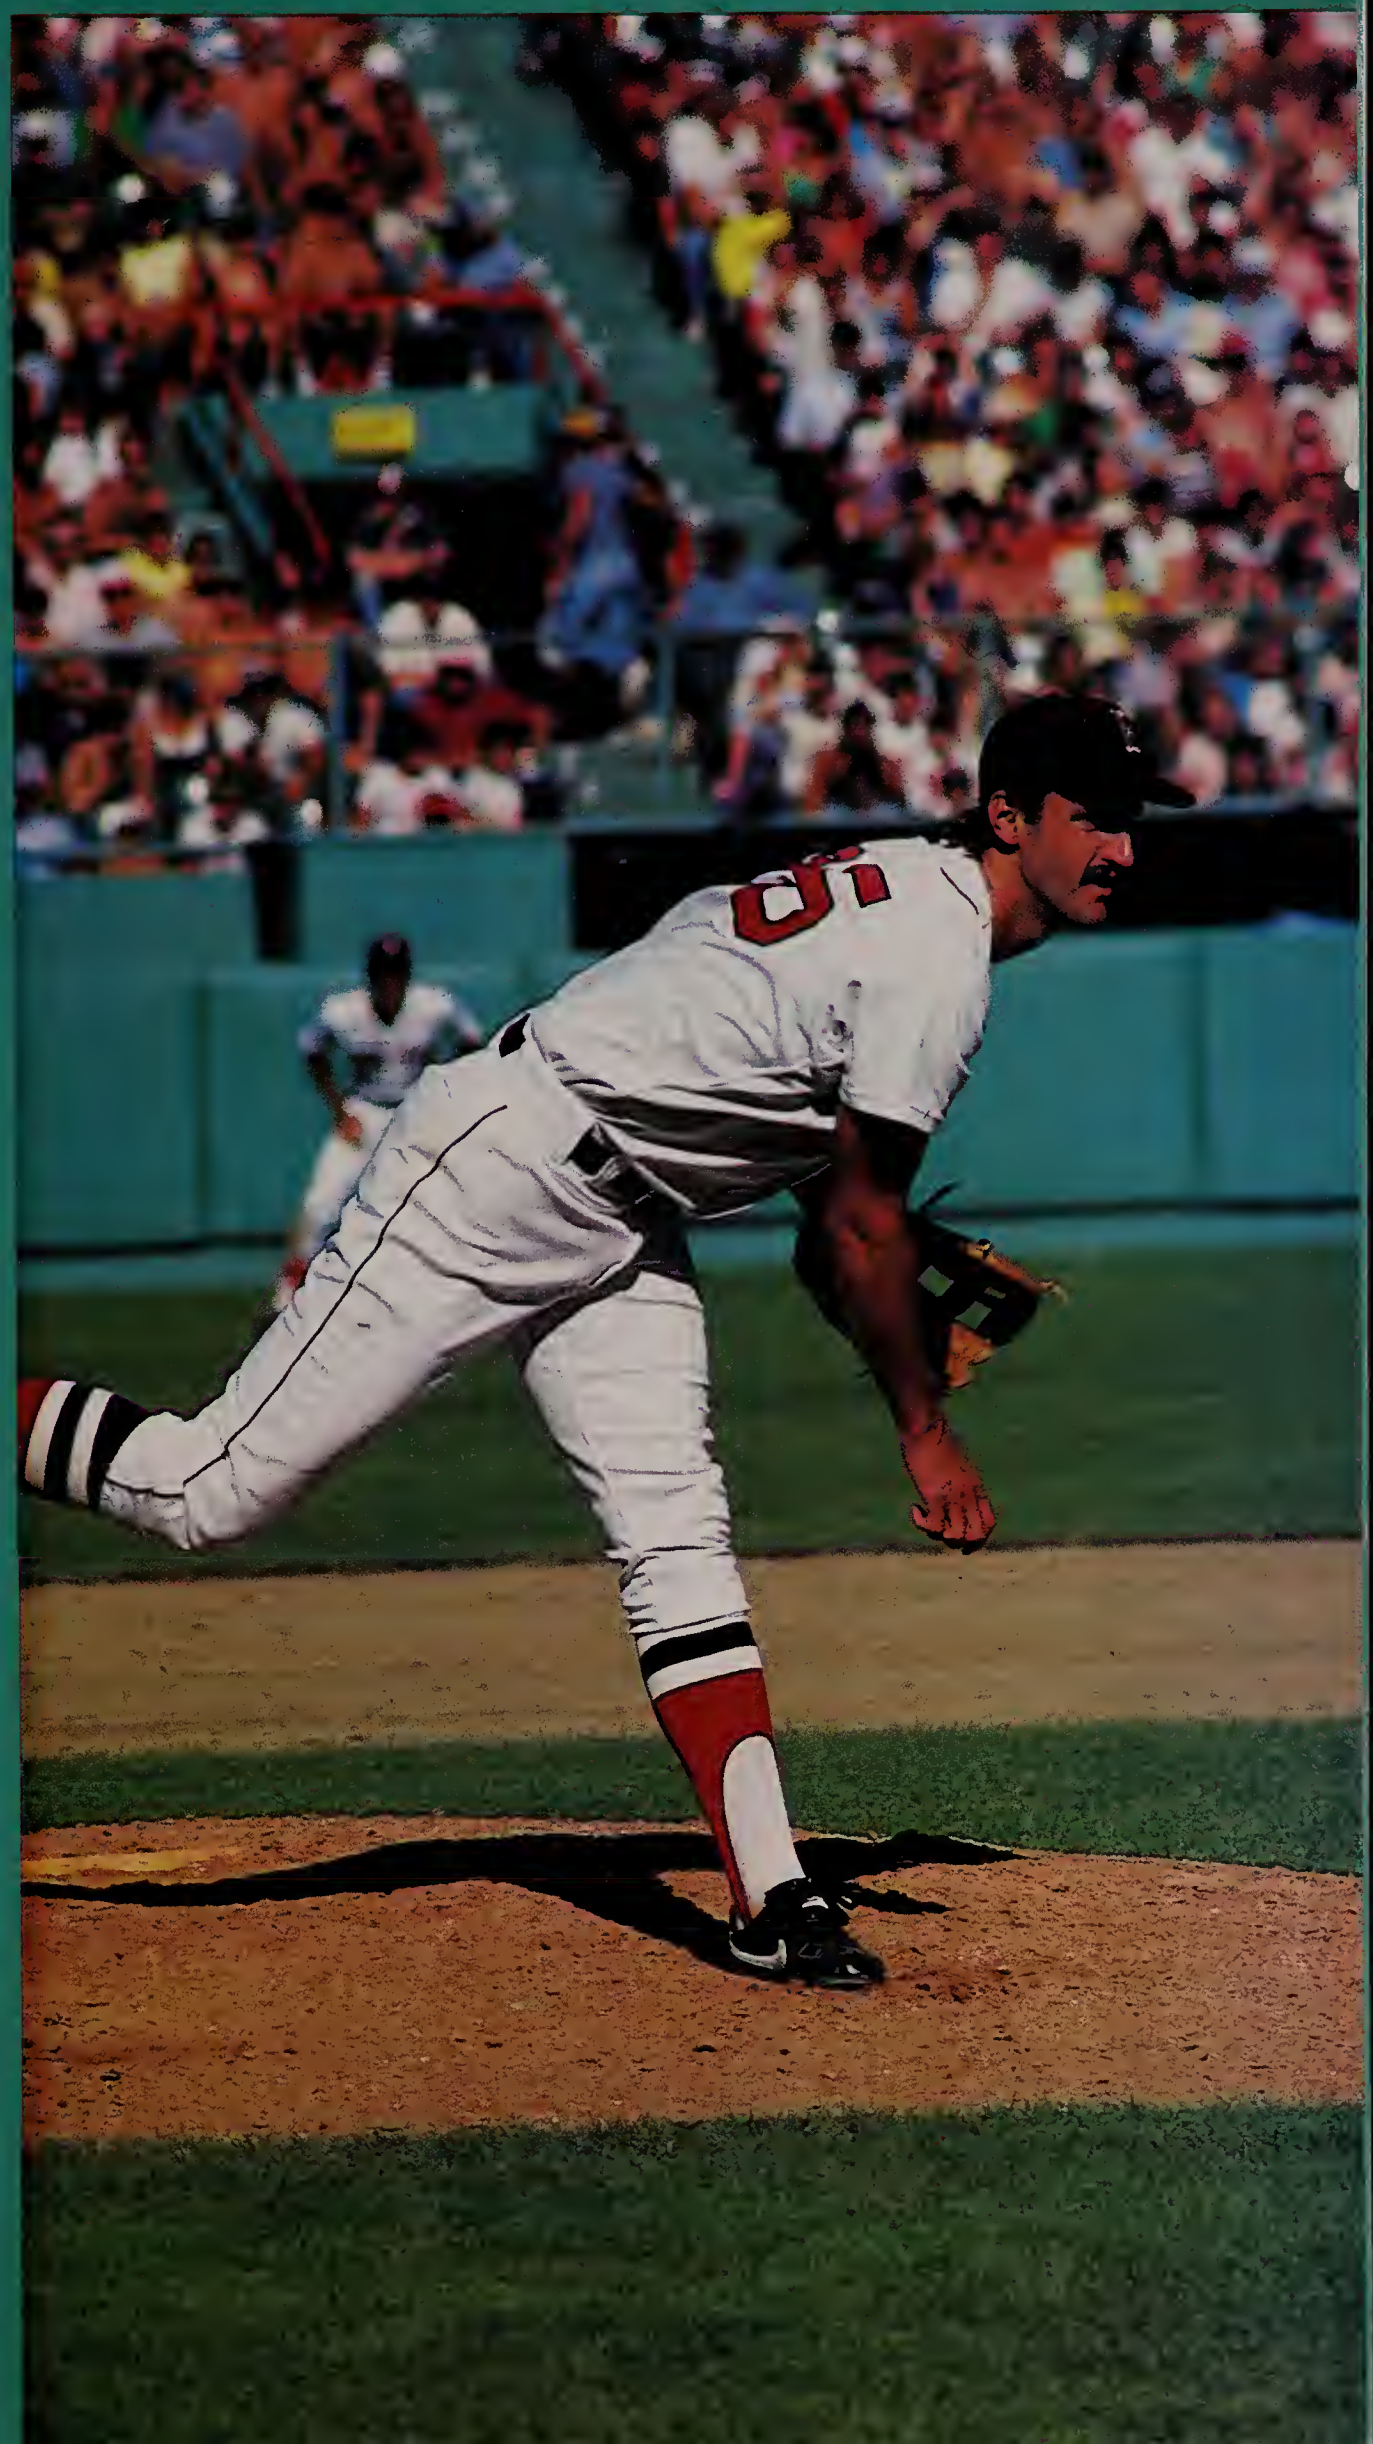

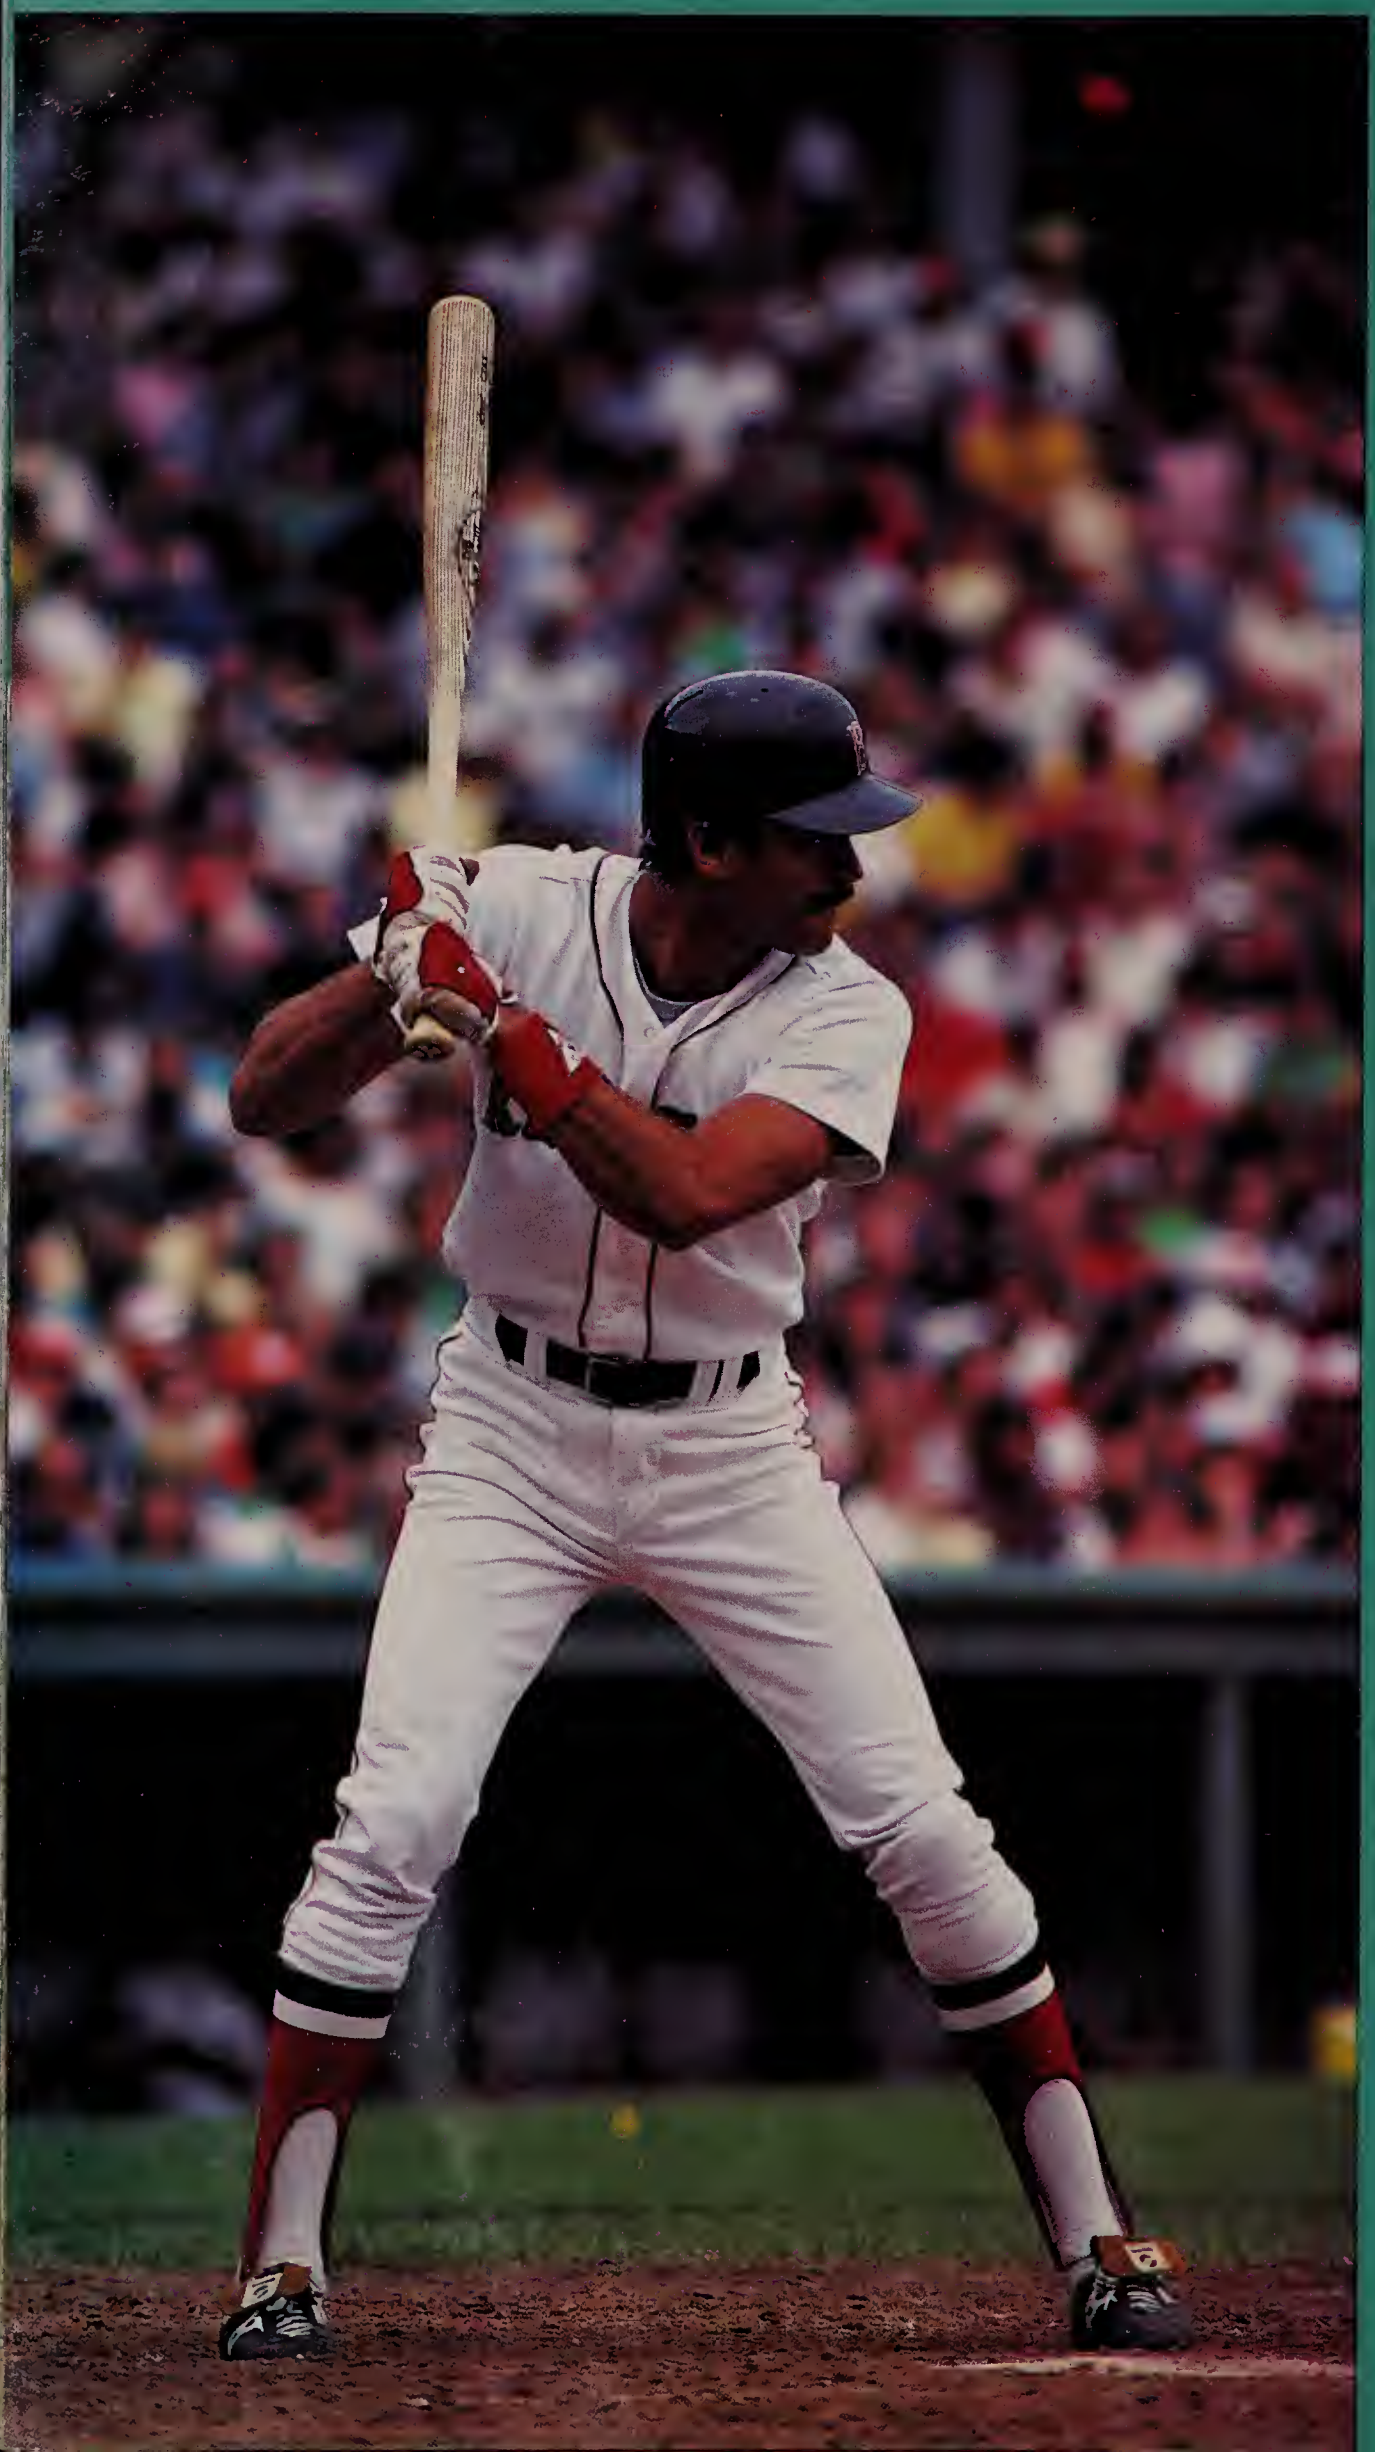

25 PITCHER

Mark Clear

Clear had an off-year in 1983 but has worked hard to return to the form that made him one of baseball's best short-relievers. Despite his 1983 performance, Mark has compiled a 26-17 record with 27 saves in three years for Boston. In 1982 he led the majors with 14 relief wins and had 109 strikeouts in 105 innings. He originally was the property of the Phillies who released him after an 0-7 pro debut in 1974. However, with the Angels in 1979, he was voted A.L. Rookie Pitcher of the Year.

Mark Clear

Eddie Jurak

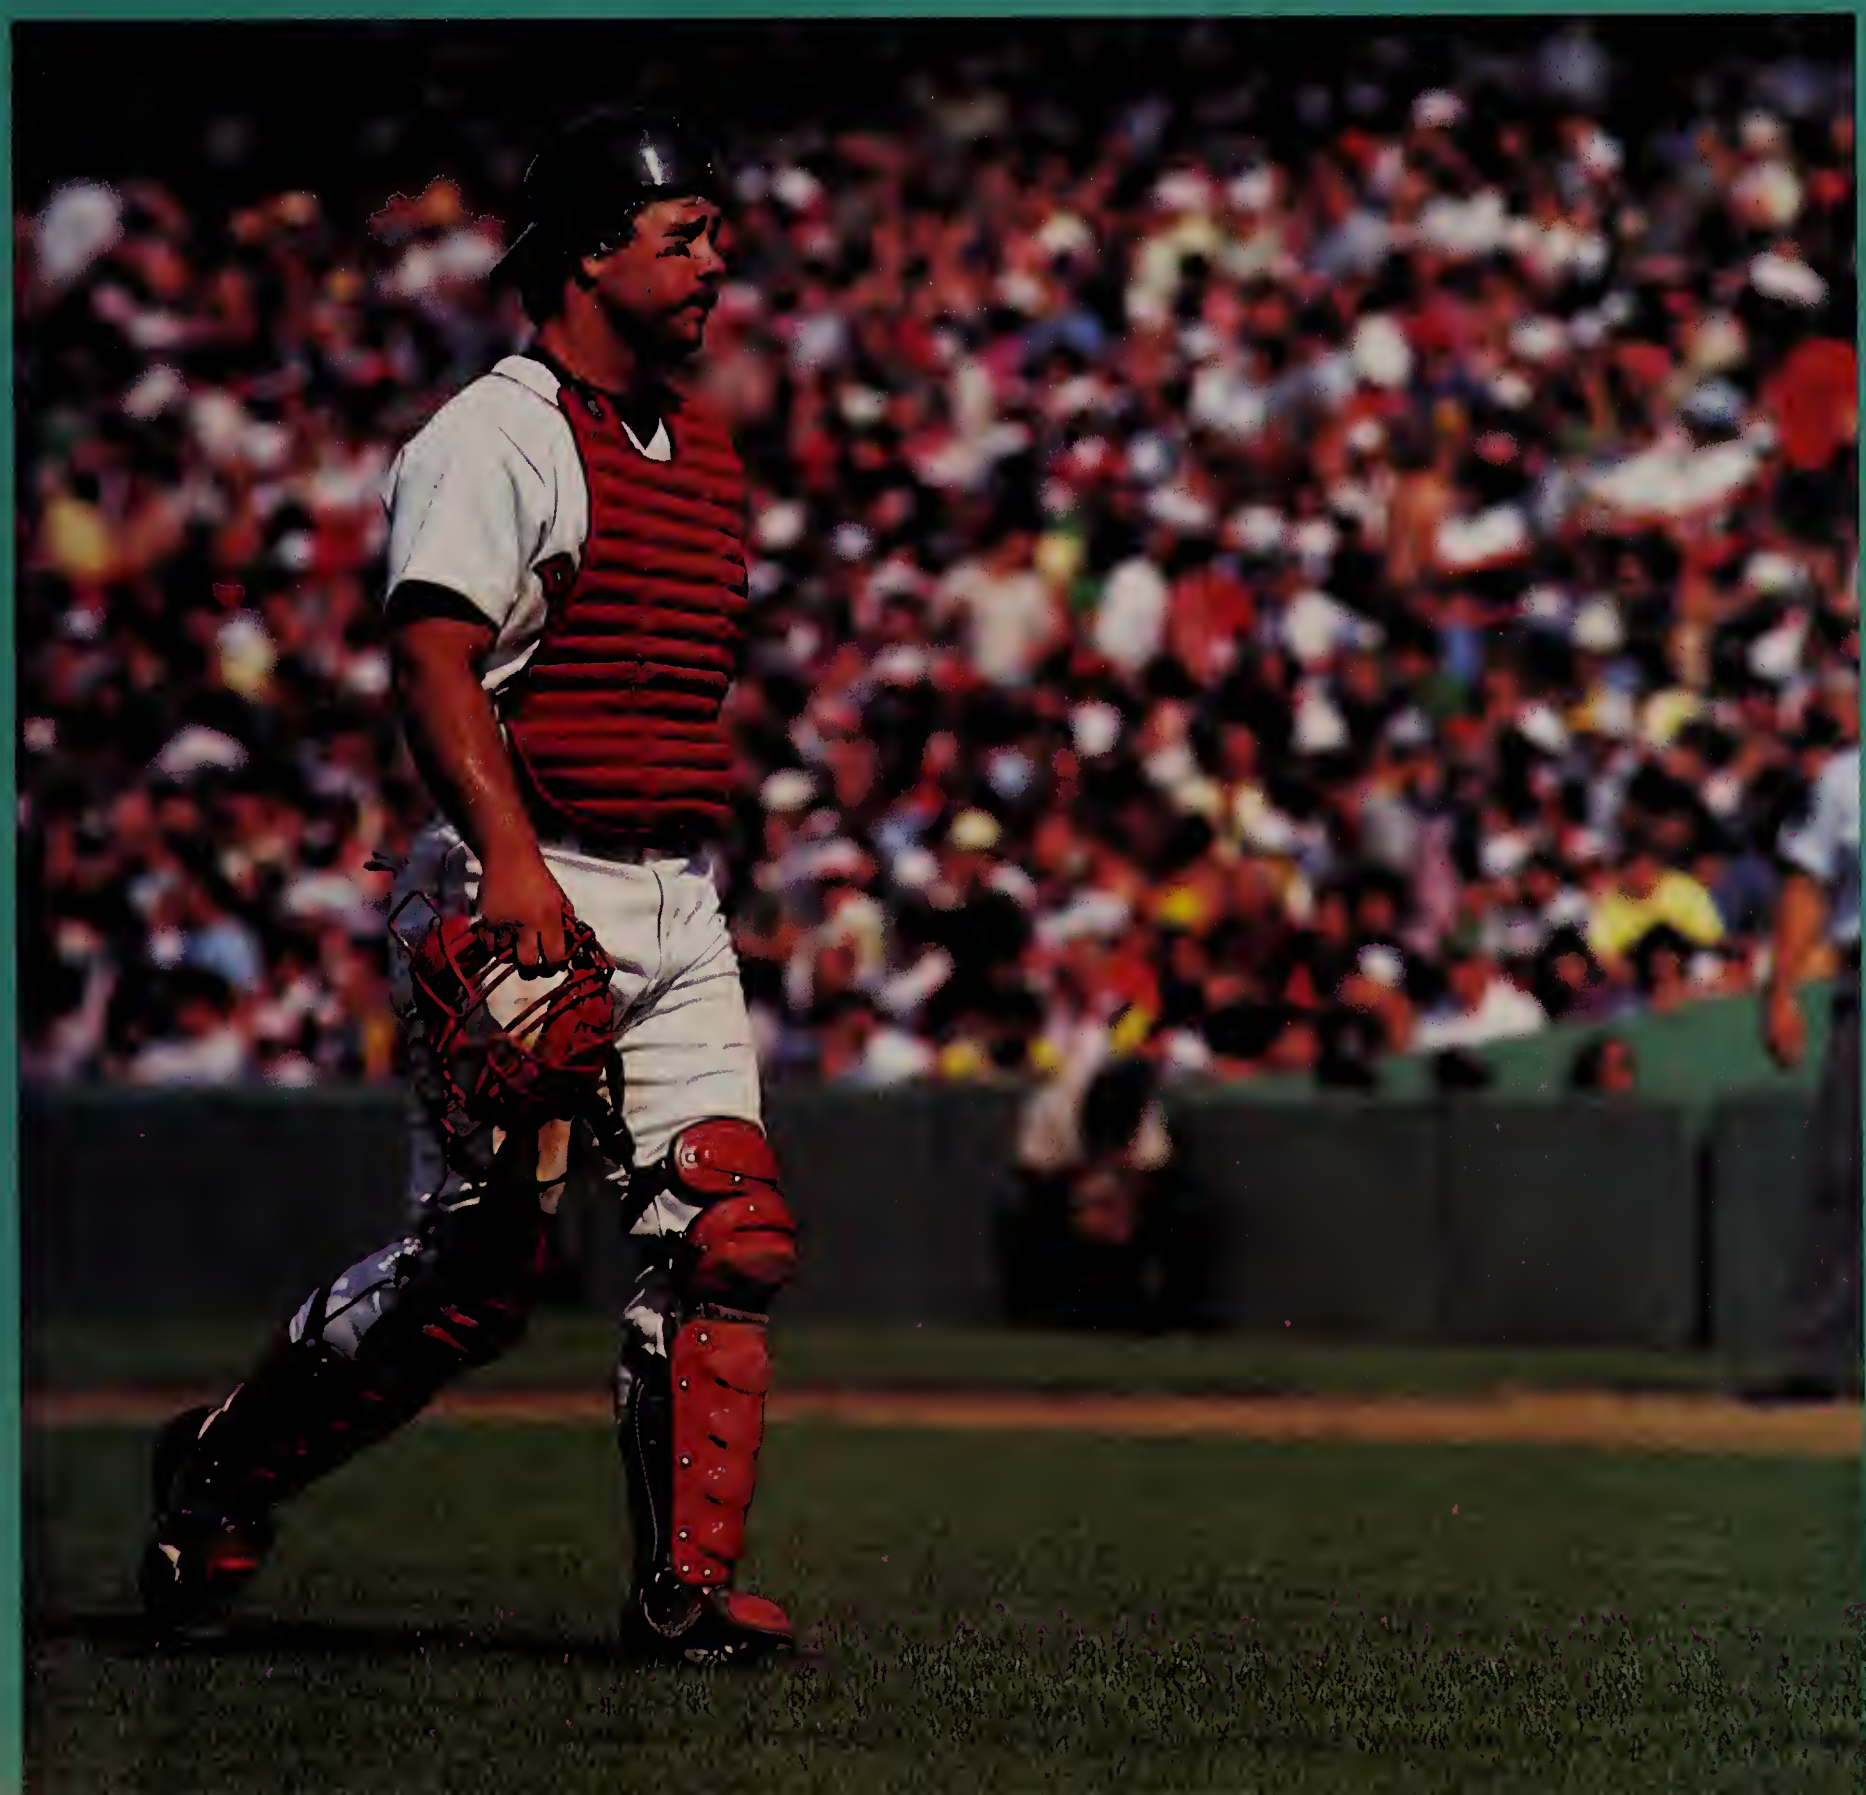

Eddie developed into the Red Sox' best utility player in 1983, his first full big-league season. He hit .277 in 75 games and saw action at all four infield positions. Jurak was a tough clutch hitter and drove in 11 of 12 runners on third base with less than two outs. In 1981 he led the Eastern League with a .340 average despite missing one month with a broken jaw. Eddie was drafted as a shortstop in 1975 and moved to third base in 1981.

Eddie Jurak

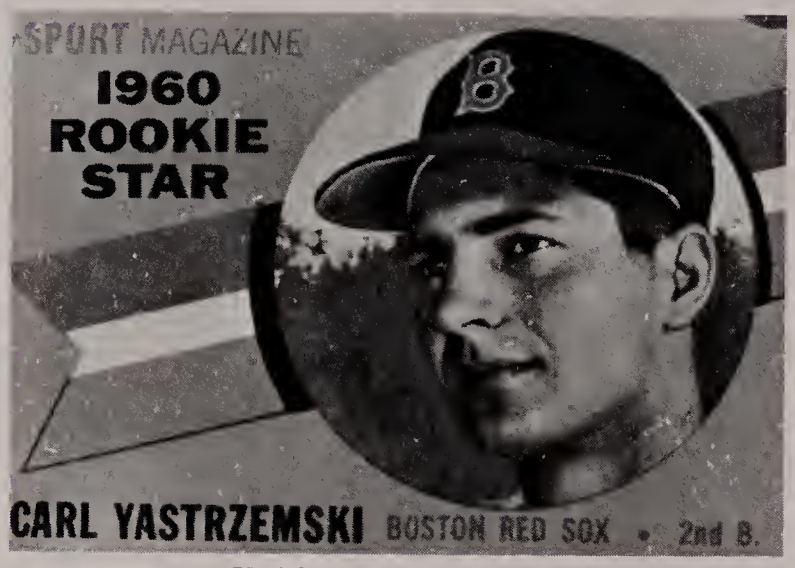

39 CATCHER

Gary Allenson

Rugged and determined. Those words characterize Muggsy's style of play. He does an excellent job behind the plate and is a tough out in clutch situations. Near the end of July, he became the regular catcher for the second straight year. On July 19 he hit three singles and a home run vs. the Angels in Anaheim for his first big-league four-hit game. He played for Arizona State in the College World Series in 1975, was the International League MVP in 1978, and homered in the first game he started in Fenway Park, April 15, 1979.

Dennis Boyd

Oil Can split 1983 between Pawtucket and Boston. A 4-8 record with the Red Sox was not indicative of his effectiveness. In six of his losses, the team scored two or less runs. He had five complete games his last 10 starts and went 11 innings vs. Baltimore on September 13 without a decision, the longest effort by a Red Sox starter in seven years. Oil Can graduated from Meridian (MS) H.S. and attended Jackson State U. His father, Willie James Boyd, played for the Homestead Grays.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd

Mike Brown

Injuries hampered what started out to be a fine rookie season for Mike. He finished 6-6 in 19 games and his only Fenway Park win was an 8-0 five-hitter vs. Seattle, his first big-league shutout. Brown was the club's top pick in the 1980 June draft after a 9-4 record as a senior at Clemson U., where in 1980 he pitched in the College World Series.
In 1981-82 he was 23-10 with a 1.91 ERA and struck out 257 batters in 255 innings at Winston-Salem and Bristol. He spent the final month of 1982 with the Red Sox.

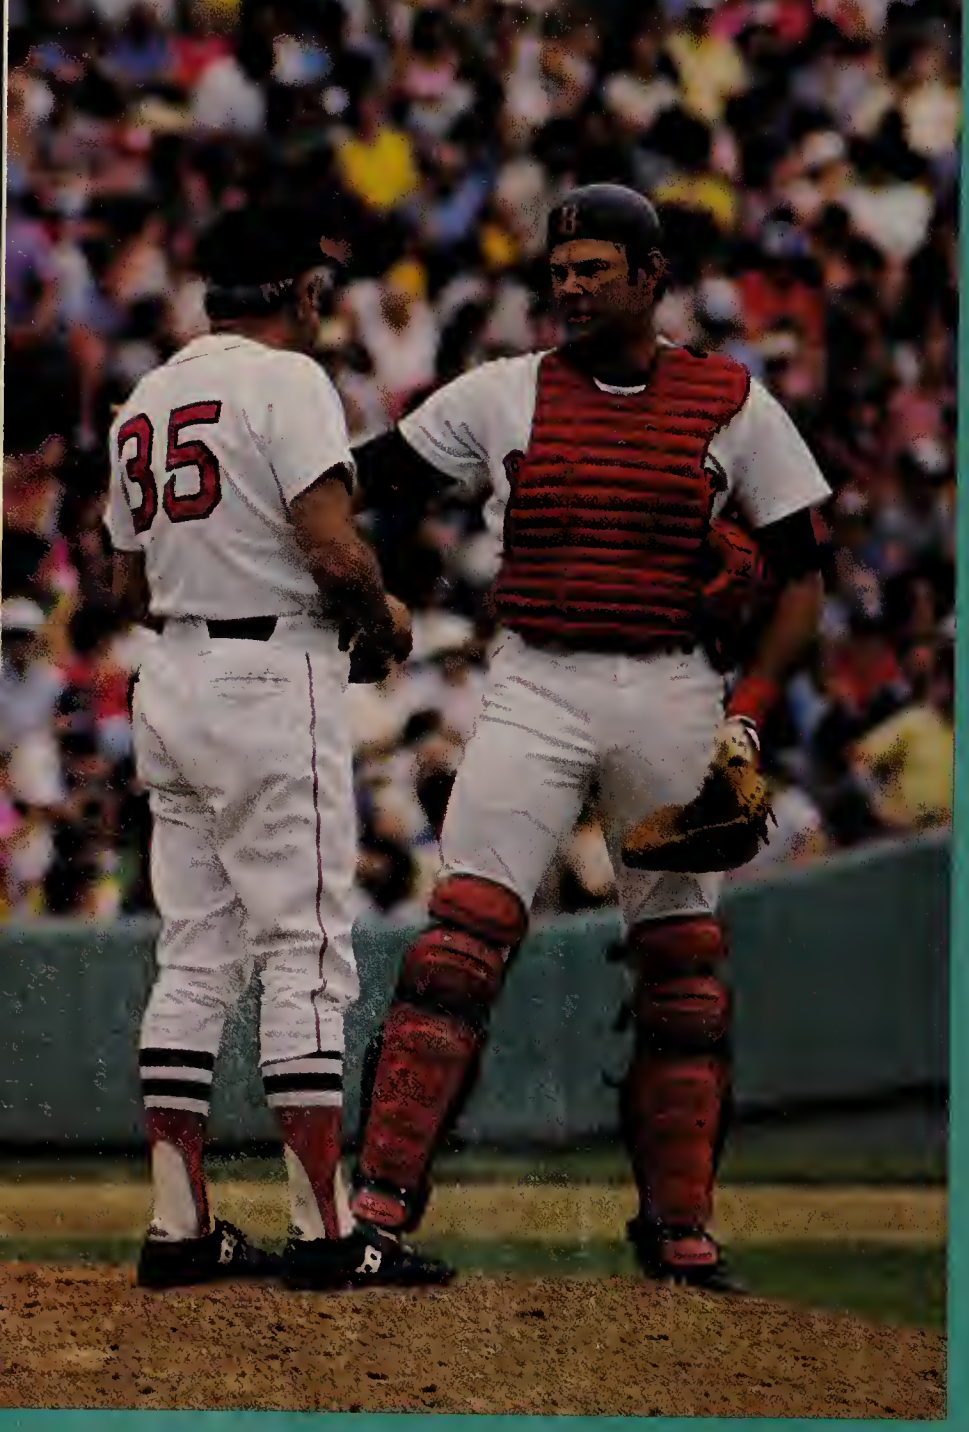

Mike Brown

5 CATCHER

Jeff Newman

The hard-working Newman turned in a steady effort behind the plate in his first year in a Red Sox uniform. The Red Sox were 17-16 in the 33 games he started as a catcher, and he threw out 14 of 36 base stealers. In 1970 Jeff started his pro career as a third baseman in the Cleveland system. He made his big-league debut with Oakland in 1976 and was with the A's until the 1982 trade that brought him to the Red Sox.

48 PITCHER

John Henry Johnson

John Henry was the Red Sox' top lefty reliever in 1983. He appeared in 34 games (his major league high), and allowed only three home runs. Acquired from Texas prior to the 1982 season, he spent that season at Pawtucket. Johnson was originally in the San Francisco system before being traded to Oakland in the Vida Blue deal. He was 11-10 with a 3.39 ERA as a rookie in 1978, then was traded to Texas midway through 1979.

Marty Barrett

Marty spent most of 1983 with the Red Sox and played in 33 games. He demonstrated the excellent bat control that has characterized his five-year pro career by striking out only once in 48 plate appearances. At Pawtucket he hit .345 in 36 games and struck out just eight times in 160 plate appearances. The Red Sox made him their first pick in the 1979 June secondary draft after he played at Arizona State. On June 23, 1981, he scored the winning run for Pawtucket in the 33rd inning to end baseball's longest game.

Jackie Gutierrez

In 1983 Jackie went from AA New Britain to AAA Pawtucket to the Red Sox for the final month. He has a rifle arm, good range, and a winning attitude. For those reasons Gutierrez could make the jump to the major league roster in 1984. The Cartagena, Colombia shortstop hit .278 at New Britain and .266 for the PawSox last summer. In 1982 he won All Star honors in the Eastern League. His father competed for Colombia in the 1936 Olympics in Berlin.

Roger Clemens

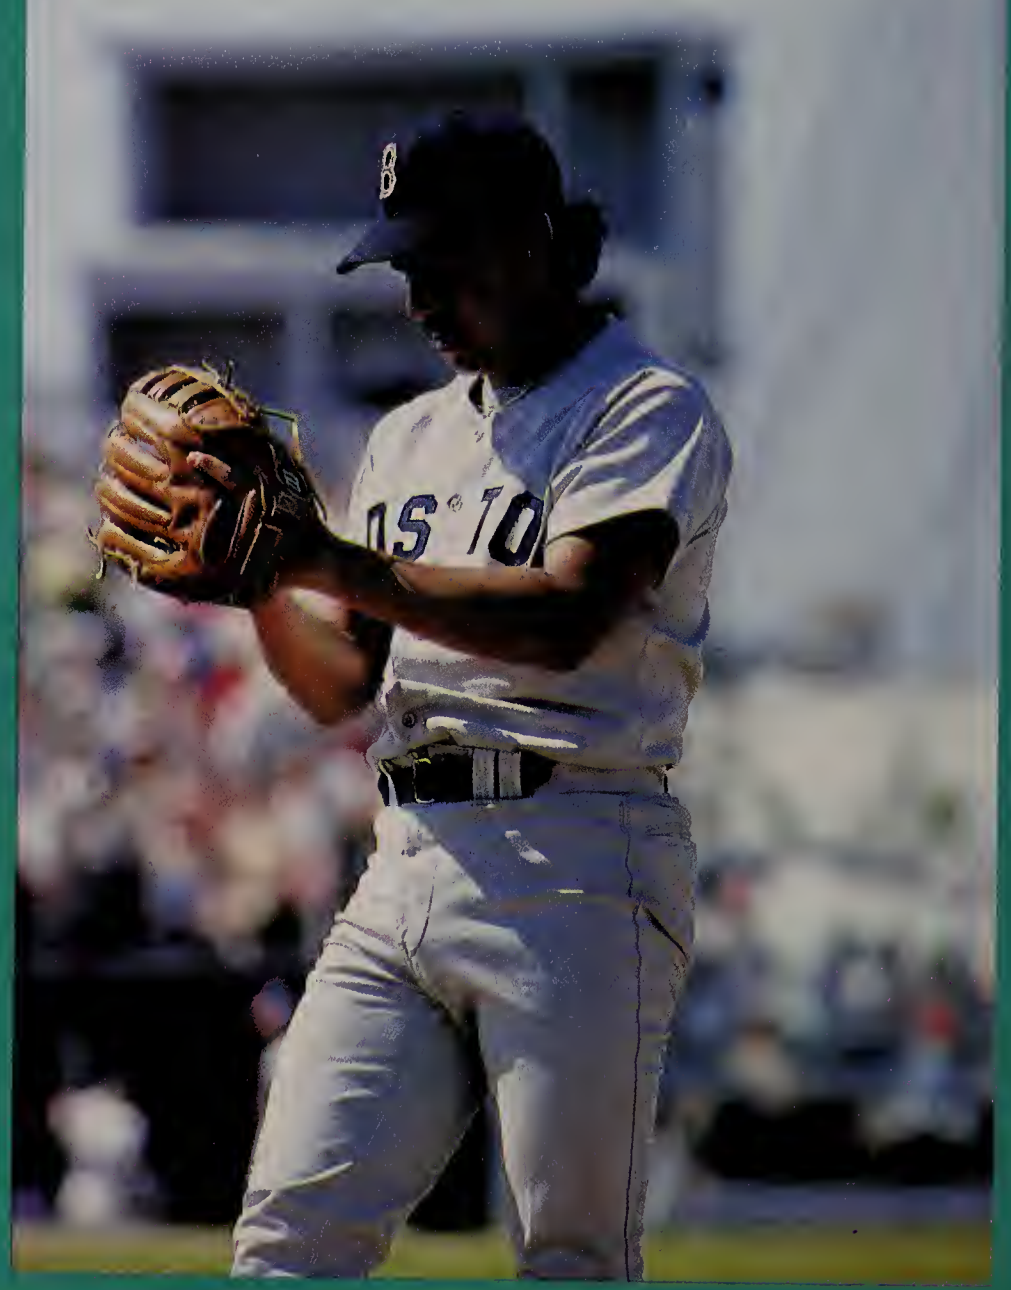

Roger was the Red Sox' first pick in the 1983 June draft. It was quite a year for the 6'4" righthander. He was the winning pitcher in the final game of the College World Series as Texas beat Alabama 4-3 for the NCAA title. He signed with the Red Sox, went to Winter Haven (3-1, 1.24 ERA in four games), and was promoted to AA New Britain. Clemens went 4-1 with a 1.38 ERA for the BriSox, and then won two games in the Eastern League playoffs including the championship finale vs. Lynn. He was a non-roster invitee to spring training and is regarded as one of baseball's best pitching prospects.

49 PITCHER

Al Nipper

Al spent the last month of 1983 with the Red Sox and won the season finale, 3-1 vs. Cleveland. He started the year at New Britain and moved up to Pawtucket June 10. The Red Sox made Al an eighth-round pick in the 1980 June draft after he won second team All American honors at Northeast Missouri State U. In 1981 he was named to the Topps Class A All Star team after a 14-8 record with a league-leading 1.70 ERA and 212 innings at Winter Haven.

Minor League Review

Power-hitting first baseman Reggie Whittemore led Pawtucket and the Red Sox minor league system with 22 HR and 84 RBI in 1983. He also led the PawSox with 203 total bases and a .492 slugging percentage. Last August Reggie hit three home runs in one game against Syracuse. RHP Roger Clemens was the Red Sox' first draft pick last June after winning All American honors at the U. of Texas and pitching the Longhorns to the NCAA championship. Roger was 7-2 in 11 games with Winter Haven and New Britain, then won two games in the playoffs as N.B. won the Eastern League Championship. In 1983 Mitch Johnson had his best pro year. The 21-year-old RHP was 15-8 at Winston-Salem with a league-high 14 complete games and 214 innings. The Mount Joy, PA native was a third-round pick in the 1980 June draft. RHP Rob Woodward went 13-11 for Winston-Salem last summer. The Lebanon, NH high-school graduate had 157 strikeouts in 197.2 innings and held the opposition to a .241 batting average. Woodward was a three-sport standout in high school and a third-round draft pick in 1981. Kevin Romine led Eastern League champion New Britain with 122 hits, 42 extra-base hits, and 80 RBI while stealing 20 bases in 132 games. The 22-year-old outfielder was an All American in 1982 at Arizona State and played on their 1981 NCAA title team. He was the fourth pick (second round) by the Sox in the 1982 June draft. LHP Mike Rochford, from So. Burlington, VT, was a Carolina League All Star in 1983 with Winston-Salem. He topped the Red Sox minor league system with 16 wins and 165 strikeouts. Mike was a first-round 1982 January draft selection. First baseman-outfielder Sam Nattile paced Winston-Salem last summer with a .285 average, 49 extra-base hits, 21 HR, and 80 RBI. He played at the U. of Central Florida, and in 1981 topped the Cape Cod Summer League with a record .443 average. Outfielder-first baseman Todd Benzinger won the "Star of Stars" award in the Florida State League All Star game last summer. The 21-year-old switch hitter led Winter Haven with 34 doubles and 68 RBI. He was an All Star in football, basketball, and baseball for New Richmond H.S. in Cincinnati. Left-handed hitter Jose Birriel had an excellent rookie year in professional baseball. The 20-year-old first baseman hit .351 in 59 games at Elmira with 10 HR and 56 RBI. He lives in Carolina, Puerto Rico. Shortstop Rey Quinonez was rated one of the top major league prospects in the New York-Pennsylvania (NYP) League at Elmira. He hit .295 in 67 games with 12 HR and 55 RBI and was named to the All Star team. Rey, 20, signed as a free agent from Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico in 1983. Outfielder Paul Thoutsis went from Holy Name H.S. in Worcester, MA last June to an All Star berth with Elmira in the NYP League. Paul, 18, had a strong finish and hit .262. The left-handed hitter was the Red Sox' fourth pick last June. Mike Mesh developed into a Carolina League All Star in 1983 for Winston-Salem. The hard-working shortstop hit .268 with 43 stolen bases. He was the Red Sox' 16th choice (13th round) in the 1982 June draft after playing two years at So. Illinois U. Shortstop Mike Brumley was the club's second draft pick last June after helping the U. of Texas win the NCAA championship. Mike hit .314 in 44 games with Winter Haven. His dad was a catcher for the Washington Senators in the 1960s. Outfielder Tony Beal hit .278 at New Britain in 125 games with 38 stolen bases. He was Florida's Babe Ruth Player of the Year in 1976. Tony graduated from Daytona Beach Mainland H.S. in 1980 and signed with the Red Sox in 1981.

Jean R. Yawkey
President

Jean R. Yawkey is in her ninth year as Red Sox president. The widow of Tom Yawkey, she succeeded him as president after his death in 1976. Mrs. Yawkey, a Red Sox enthusiast, attends most home games in her familiar rooftop box, where for years she watched by her husband's side. As Jean Hollander, she grew up in Freeport, Long Island, before becoming Mrs. Tom Yawkey in 1944 at Georgetown, SC.

Mrs. Yawkey was active with the Red Cross during World War II. She has long been associated with New England's Jimmy Fund/Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. For the past twelve years, Mrs. Yawkey has been active in Tara Hall, a nondenomination home and school for boys in South Carolina. She is also a trustee of the Yawkey Foundation. It supports a number of institutions and projects including the 40,000-acre Tom Yawkey Wildlife Center willed to the state of South Carolina by Mr. Yawkey. She is a director of the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY, the first woman to be elected a director of baseball's famed museum.

Haywood C. Sullivan
Executive Vice-President, General Manager

Haywood C. Sullivan is the Red Sox executive vice-president and general manager. He was named to that position in October, 1977 and was a principal in the group which purchased the club from the Yawkey Estate in May, 1978. Sullivan is a baseball success story: a one-time reserve catcher, he rose from dugout to ownership of the team. He was a three-sport star at Dothan (AL) High School and was all-conference in baseball and football at the University of Florida. A top pro prospect as both a quarterback and a catcher, Sullivan signed with the Red Sox on June 15, 1952.

Sullivan is a member of the major leagues' Restructuring Committee, Long-Range Planning Committee, Budget and Audit Committee, and Special Considerations Committee. He served on the majors' Executive Council the past four years before his term expired last December. He is also a trustee of the Jimmy Fund.

Edward G. (Buddy) LeRoux, Jr.
Executive Vice-President, Administration

Edward G. (Buddy) LeRoux, Jr., is the Red Sox executive vice-president in charge of the club's administration and business matters. He was named to that position in October, 1977 and assembled the group which purchased the club from the Yawkey Estate in May, 1978. LeRoux is one of baseball's more remarkable stories—like Sullivan, he advanced from dugout to team ownership. Buddy was the Red Sox trainer from 1966-74, including the "Impossible Dream" pennant-winning year (1967). Previously, he had been trainer of the Boston Celtics from 1958-66, through eight consecutive world championships.

In addition to overseeing the administrative details at Fenway Park, LeRoux is a member of the American League Schedule Committee. He has long been active in both the health and real estate fields. Buddy is founder and president of New England Rehabilitation Hospital in Woburn, MA and trustee of the Jimmy Fund. He is also a member of the President's Committee on Physical Fitness and the Governor's Committee on Physical Fitness.

James L. (Lou) Gorman
Vice-President of Baseball Operations

James L. (Lou) Gorman was named Red Sox vice-president of baseball operations on February 1, 1984. He works directly with Haywood Sullivan in all matters relating to the operation of the club on the field. His duties include handling all aspects of player personnel at the major and minor league levels.

Gorman, originally from Providence, RI, spent the last three years as vice-president of baseball operations for the Mets. His major league baseball career began as assistant director of scouting and minor league clubs with the Orioles in 1963. From 1968 to 1980, he held various positions in the Royals and Mariners organizations. Lou is a captain in the Naval Reserve with 34 years of service including 26 months aboard the carrier U.S.S. Hornet during the Korean War.

From the Broadcast Booth

Ken Coleman

When I was a youngster growing up in North Quincy, MA, Sundays in the summer for my dad and me were Fenway Park and Braves Field. I can remember glancing up toward the radio booth at Fenway, seeing announcer Jim Britt and thinking, "Some day I'd like to be there." From the eighth grade on, my ambition was to be the Red Sox announcer. I don't think many people in the world get to realize their ambitions. I was fortunate, however, to realize mine.

As a baseball broadcaster I come into contact with people from all walks of life—from captains of industry to cab drivers. One of the comments I hear most often is, "I wish I had your job. What a way to make a living!" I have no rebuttal. Quite simply, I agree.

I find it hard to believe sometimes that this will be my 29th season of baseball play-by-play. Like the ballplayer, I enter into each season hoping to improve upon my previous season's performance. When the day comes that a broadcaster or ballplayer stops feeling that way, then it's time to hang 'em up.

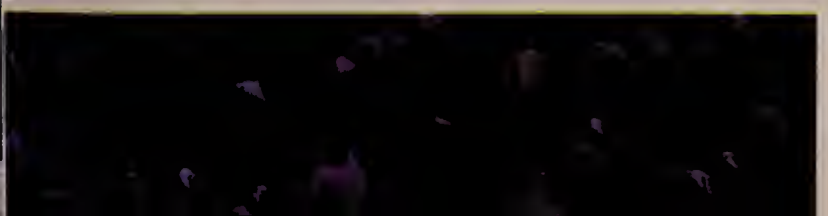

Over the course of a 162-game season, there are times when baseball broadcasters experience slumps—everything appears difficult, words are not flowing. I've had days when I think I've done an excellent job broadcasting a game, and somebody will tell me otherwise. Then there are times when fans will compliment me on what I considered was a bad job. One thing I have learned in this business is that you can only do the best you can. A wise man once said, "I can't tell you how to succeed, but I can tell you how to fail, and that is to try and please everybody."

Someone once asked newscaster Lowell Thomas how long it took to prepare for a broadcast. Thomas replied, "Well, you might say twenty minutes or you could say twenty years." There is no adequate length of preparation time, however, that will guarantee that mistakes will not be made. I was broadcasting a Cleveland Indians game in Kansas City back in the '50s and attempting to describe a catch about to be made by Indians' outfielder Rocky Colavito. What I intended to say was, "There goes Rocky back against the wall," but instead I said, "There goes Wally back against the rock." I caught the error fortunately, and in an effort to redeem myself simply said, "For those of you interested in statistics, that was my 12th fluff of the year which puts me in third place in the American League."

Last year I made the most embarrassing mistake of my career. The Red Sox were playing a game in Cleveland and were ahead by one run. The Indians had runners at second and third, and Ralph Houk brought Bob Stanley in to pitch. Mike Hargrove came to bat for the Indians and lined a single to left field scoring two runs. In describing the action I said,

A spring training interview with Dodger manager Tom Lasorda.

"Here comes the tying run, and here comes the winning run, and the Indians win it by a score of 3-2." As the second run crossed the plate, I looked out onto the field and noticed Bob Stanley still standing on the mound. I thought to myself, "Why isn't he walking off of the field? The game is over." I quizzically looked at my partner, Joe Castiglione, who returned an equally puzzling look. (Joe and I have an automatic signal when one of us makes a mistake in giving the wrong count or an incorrect score. We note it to each other or whisper, and sometimes even make the correction aloud, without showing up the other. This time, however, words failed us.) When I realized that we were just in the eighth inning, my only recourse was to admit my error saying, "Ladies and gentlemen, I'm sitting in a broadcasting booth in Cleveland, Ohio, and I have a very red face. It's red because the game is not over, we're only in the eighth inning."

The Voices of the Red Sox — Ned Martin, Ken Coleman, Mel Parnell in 1966.

If you can make fun of yourself, in anything you do in life, people will relate to you. The response that I received for my error and comeback was positive. People wrote letters telling me not to worry, that they make mistakes in their work, too. Such reinforcement can be most supportive.

In terms of a day-to-day schedule, I try to arrive at the ballpark at least 2½ hours before the game to visit the managers, talk with coaches and players, and prepare myself mentally for the concentration that is required when the game begins. I often have our engineer, John Mullaney, tape portions of the broadcast to listen to on the way home from a game. This is an effective way to check on pacing, timing, repetition, and all of the little things you can pick up to do a better job.

I have had occasion over the years to do some national work on seven NFL championship games and in the 1967 World Series where an announcer is supposed to be objective. I believe that objectivity should be part of the effort of the broadcaster covering one team, at least in terms of accuracy and giving credit where it is due on both sides. People tell me they know who's ahead in a game, if they tune in to a broadcast late, just by the sound of my voice. As long as one does not color the truth, I see nothing wrong with this.

In some cities, baseball announcers are the employees of the team whose games they broadcast. I work for Campbell Sports Network, and I greatly appreciate the fact that Jack Campbell (president), who knows baseball very well, leaves Joe Castiglione and me to our own devices. No one with the Red Sox has ever told me how to broadcast a game. In some cities that is not the case.

There is no question that the broadcaster's vantage point at Fenway Park is the best in the country — one is literally on top of everything. In 1982 Olympic hockey star Mike Eruzione, who threw out the first ball, later commented, "Now I see how you guys can tell it [the pitch] was a slider."

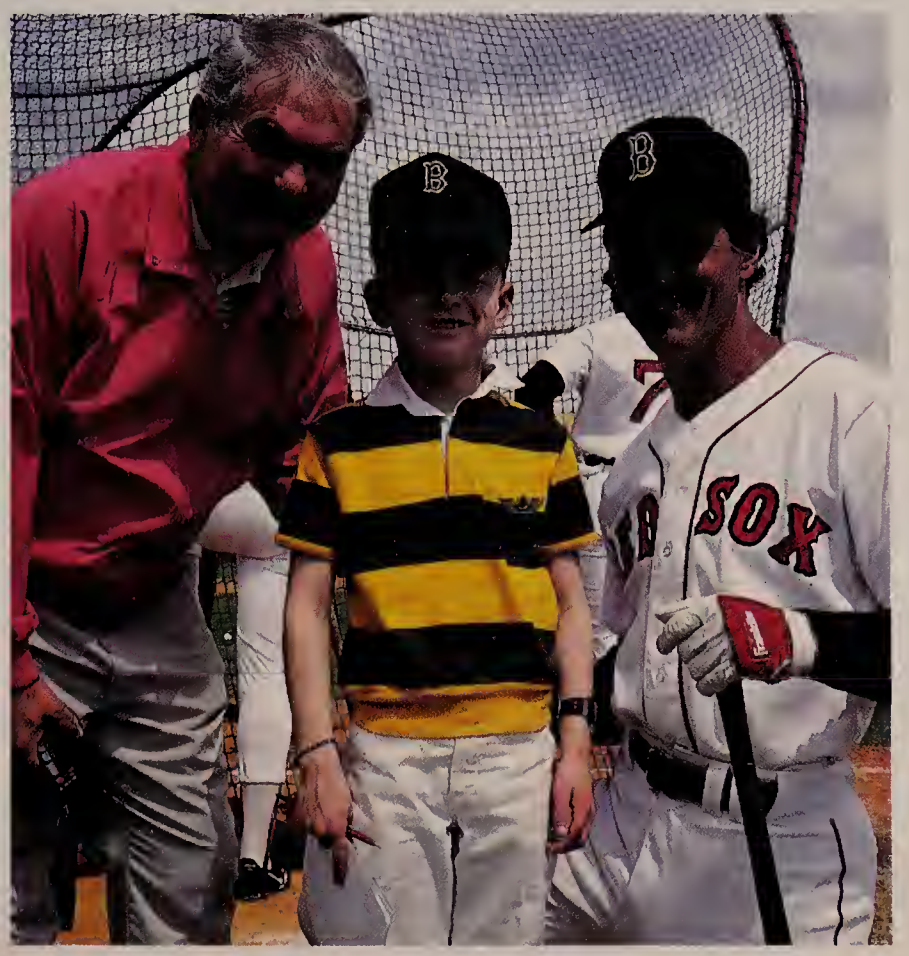

Baseball is probably the easiest game for the listener to visualize. However, it is the responsibility of the broadcaster to be honest and accurate in describing the action to the fan listening at home. Maintaining credibility and wearability with the fans is of utmost importance when one considers the broadcaster is visiting people's homes for three hours or so nearly every day, from March through September, covering 20 exhibition games and 162 regular season games.

Over the years I have been fortunate to have witnessed many exciting and unforgettable moments on the playing field. The most memorable occurred on October 1, 1967, the day the Red Sox beat the Minnesota Twins to win the pennant. That was my biggest thrill. I went on to announce the 1967 World Series, a privilege not afforded all announcers. The year 1967 was special to me. I had come to the Red Sox in 1966, the year they finished ½ game out of tenth place and drew meager daily attendances at Fenway. I recall returning home from a road trip, on which the Red Sox had a 10-game winning streak, to a throng of about 10,000 fans at the airport. People were beginning to realize the possibility of an impossible dream. The last two months of that '67 season were as exciting as that October Sunday. Fans and non-fans were being swept up by the craze.

Reflecting upon that season, certain stories come to mind. In one particular game, the score was 0-0 in the bottom of the 10th inning, when Reggie Smith led off with a triple. He eventually scored, the Red Sox won the game, and a traffic jam resulted. It seems that a man refused to drive through the Sumner Tunnel in Boston until he heard the outcome of the inning.

Billy Rohr's one-hit game against the Yankees in Yankee Stadium early in 1967 was another memorable moment for me as was the final weekend of the 1983 season — the farewell to Carl Yastrzemski, not only a fine ballplayer but also a great friend.

I've been told that broadcasting is very insecure work, but after 29 years I'm beginning to feel that this may turn into a steady job. I certainly hope so because it sure is fun!

Ken Coleman, shown here with Dwight Evans and Devin Sullivan, is also affiliated with the Jimmy Fund.

Red Sox Radio-TV

The Campbell Sports Radio Network and WSBK-TV 38 are carrying Red Sox games throughout the 1984 season on radio and television. Veteran Ken Coleman and Joe Castiglione are working together on the radio broadcasts for the second year. WPLM AM-FM in Plymouth is the network's flagship station that comprises approximately 60 stations in New England, and two in Florida.

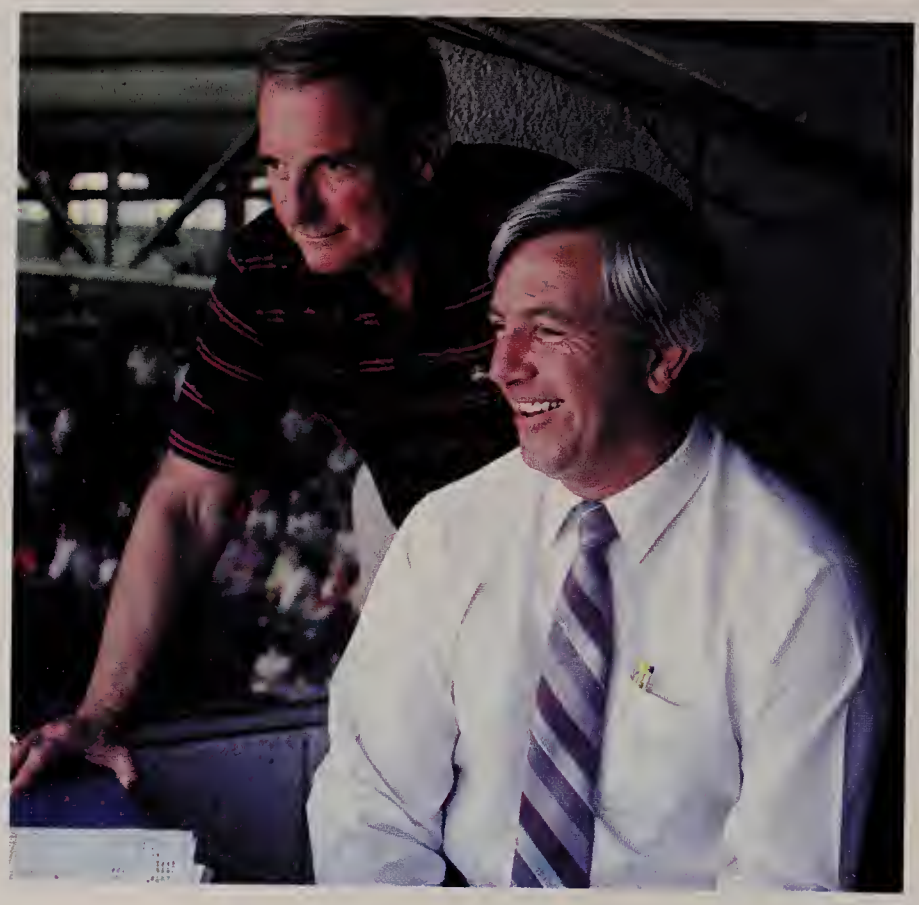

Coleman has covered Red Sox games on radio and TV for 14 years. The Quincy, MA native is also the associate co-ordinator of donor contributions for the Jimmy Fund. Ken has been broadcasting for over 30 years including several years with the Cleveland Indians and the Cincinnati Reds.

Castiglione, another native New Englander, from Hamden, CT, graduated from Colgate University and did play-by-play of Indians' games on cable TV in 1982 after a similar position for the Milwaukee Brewers in 1981. Joe began his career in 1979 on the Indians' commercial TV network and then became the club's backup radio man the next year.

For the third year Ned Martin and Bob Montgomery are telecasting Red Sox games on TV 38 and its New England network.

In 1961 Martin joined Curt Gowdy on the Red Sox broadcasts and has done radio, as well as TV, for 24 years. Ned, a Duke University graduate, did minor league games before joining the Red Sox. He has been with the TV 38 crew since 1979.

Montgomery played in the Red Sox organization as a catcher from 1962 until an arm injury caused his retirement in the spring of 1980. He then did radio work on a sports talk show for two years plus some announcing of Red Sox games on radio.

NESN Cable TV

Red Sox games are on cable TV for the first time this year. The New England Sports Network (NESN), is telecasting 87 regular season games on cable throughout New England.

The new announcing team is Kent Der Divanis and Mike Andrews, the former a newcomer to the Northeast and the latter a local popular sports personality.

Der Divanis, 29, comes from Los Angeles where he was announcing UCLA football and basketball on KMPC radio. He did play-by-play and color commentary on the Milwaukee Brewers TV network, pre-season interviews for the Cleveland Indians cable system, and minor league announcing in Portland and Denver.

Andrews, 40, is the Executive Director of the Jimmy Fund and has done a weekend sports talk radio show with former Red Sox catcher Jerry Moses.

Mike played second base for the Red Sox from 1966 through 1970 as part of an eight-year major league career. He was one of the heroes of the 1967 "Impossible Dream" pennant and played in the 1967 and 1973 World Series, as well as the 1969 All Star Game.
